Vocations By Mail

An "educational mail order firm," as it is referred to, is successfully doing a good business out of Michigan. Organizations of this type usually operate on the following principle: A catalog is prepared in which the materials are carefully described. The student receives his catalog and selects the course he wishes to take. He then sends in his registration fee, and he is sent a course book. The course book contains all the necessary materials for the course. The student studies the course book and takes the examinations. He then sends in his answers. The firm grades the examination and sends back the graded examination. If the student passes, he is issued a certificate of completion. If he fails, he is given the opportunity to retake the examinations.

The student is free to choose the length of time he wishes to spend on the course. He may take the course as a part-time study, or he may take it full-time. The firm usually provides a list of instructors who are available for correspondence. The student is free to choose his own instructor, or he may select from a list of qualified instructors.
