Symphony Orchestra Gives Formal Concert Tuesday

By Alan Hyde

The definitely successful stage play of the Prelude to Wagner’s revered “Lohengrin” opened the year’s final concert for the Metropolitan Symphony Orchestra at 8:30 Tuesday evening. Sophie Evelyn Faller was guest artist.

Second of the selections in the first orchestral was an introduction to the Wagnerian experience, less dramatic in type and more suggestive of the way in which the music is written. The main theme was a clear, easy-to-hear melodic duality.

Miss Faller, charmingly and simply dressed in a white, long-sleeved dress, played with a poise and grace that indicated her full powers of expression. Her playing was characterized by an accurate, strong command of the orchestra, and the music was easy to follow. She was a pleasant surprise to all who attended the performance.

The course aims to give the trainees a sound and thorough training and will consist of four years of flying, followed by two years of instruction in technical subjects. The course will be conducted by the army officers commanding the training program in Idaho.
