Economist To Speak

Buth Alexander

To Discuss

Pro-Capitalism

In this regard, Alexander, who was also noted for his interest in free market economy and politics, mentioned the importance of understanding the role of economics in modern society. He noted that economics is not just about numbers and theories, but it is also about policies and their impact on people's lives. Alexander's views on capitalism were well known, and he often spoke about the benefits of a free-market economy, which he believed could lead to increased innovation and prosperity.

Specialization is the key when the navy was moving in on the Idaho campus has been discussed pro and con ever since two more naval officers toured the campus and inspected housing, feeding, and laboratory facilities for possible use as a navy training school. The pair of officers were —Lieut. Comm. Tom Hamilton, former Naval academy football coach, and Lieut. A. H. Wicker— isa the second contingent of officers to inspect the campus in the last week.

The navy planted and established several training camps in the Pacific Northwest area for airplane mechanics and radio division and about 650 dry land sailors would be stationed here providing the facilities are acceptable to the navy.

However, the navy men probably wouldn't be stationed here until after the end of the present semester and no student would be required to move out of his dormitory facilities, according to President Harrison G. Dole. Further checks up will be made in the future providing Idaho is tentatively selected as a site for the camp.

Communique Comment

Soon after he had bought Singapore from the Sultan of Johore in 1815, Sir Stamford Raffles of the English East India Company sailed into the port he would build on that low island would enable his countrymen to attain a commanding position in the valuable trade of the East then monopolized by the Dutch. In the next century Raffles' base took its place beside Gillealor, the Suez Canal and the Panama Canal as one of the four most important strategic points along the sea lanes of the world. It is now in heavy danger of capture by the soldiers of a nation that was enlarged ex culp of mediocrity by the British bombardment of the Japanese coast in 1853 and 1864. Official London is silent as to Singapore's chances, but there is no excess of optimism behind the closed departmental doors.
