Golden Fleece

By Jason

For the first time in several years—possibly as long ago as 1935—Idaho students will have the chance to witness the annual demonstration of the student body of a large state university at a special assembly called by the ASUI president. Traditionally an overtly featured feature of the campus calendar, the occasion has become something of a neglected custom.

Thursday morning to determine the fate of two amendments to ASUI's rules, which would automatically lapse after the war is over.

Purpose of the amendments frankly is to save the ASUI money. One amendment, probably the most revolutionary to be proposed in recent years, would abolish mid-year class elections, allowing class officers to serve two semesters. Abolition of the mid-year election would save the ASUI about $125—which could be used to increase the budgets of the minor student groups, the debate team, pep band, and other ASUI functions.

For one semester class officers are useless. The first semester, the only duties that freshmen and junior class officers perform are those for posing for the Gem picture and during the second semester the seniors and sophomores are in turn required to be shamming duties, because they aren't expected to do anything. It is an honest position, where chief benefits are serving as burial grounds for patronage tossed out of the campus parties.

Should the amendment be passed at the assembly next Thursday, class elections this year would be eliminated, and the set of class officers would be retained until the end of the year and executive board would appoint persons to fill the offices vacated by the departure of class officers. They would be appointed from the class until the time when the now-absent of full-time officer was elected.

On paper it looks like a drastic political coup, designed to benefit one of the other political party. But its political effects would not operate to the advantage of either group. Of the two active clauses the second semester, the spoils are evenly divided between the two parties. Greeks have control of the junior class and would have charge of handing out patronage for two years at the urgent campus events of the year—the prom and cabaret. The Independents have the freshman class on their side; in case of a coup, Greeks would probably lose the choice political jobs for the foreseeable future.

The Independents, in control of the executive board 2 to 3 before Uncle Sam and the Shoshone high school brought three board members away from school, could not possibly lose control of the board upon the proportional representation voting for board. But the board now stands four Independents to two Greeks and even at the worst for the Independents they would be assured of on board member elected.

Executive board members realized when they passed the amendments by a unanimous vote last Wednesday (after two afternoons of discussion on the measure) that political party chieftains might interpret the amendments as a political coup rather than as a money-saving measure. They realized that possibly the measure could be railroaded through the student body by the following of a constitutional clause defining the powers of the executive board that reads: "the board shall perform all other duties not delegated, which are necessary and proper." It could have been put into effect by a special board vote and taken to the arbitration board—composed of ASUI President Milt Eberhard, President Harrison C. Cartwright, Judge Evan Abrons, and Representative John Agnew. But it was decided to put the measure before the students in a supreme assembly, hoping that political chieftains would not seize upon its broad power of unwelcome and political a coup or any measure of students to understand that the amendment was designed to save their money other ASUI functions which more directly affect them.

Maybe that would be the case, but via a grapevine, Jason heard that the United States party is planning to block the amendment. The probable method would be to get a majority of 24 per cent of the student body to accomplish a constitutional amendment which requires a two-thirds majority.

President has established the principle the executive board can, which was into effect amendment contradictory to the constitution, even after it has been defeated at general Baldwin. For the 1934 election of the "purifying amendments which were defeated and again by United Students in elections conducted under those "purifying principles" executive board ordered an Independent-sponsored student board to be elected.

Nothing could stop the executive board from doing the same thing this election if the amendment were defeated at Thursday's assembly. Only a one-per-cent vote of the student body could possibly block an amendment. Only twenty per cent of the students are on campus and even a vote of one-thousandths of the student would defeat the amendment. Possibly a defeat of the amendment Thursday meeting would not indicate the outcome of the election.

From Jason's sideline position, it looks saving $125 is a very wise thing. The ASUI treasury is too small to support the expenditure of the current amendment and for the cancellation of minor sports events, charging Argonaut to a tabloid, the threatened cancellation of the band, the threat of a boycott by the cooperation of downtown merchants, other belt-tightening measures.

Dan Taylor Describes Peaceful Life Of Argentine Gauchos

By Barbara Mears

"Life is swell in Argentina," according to Dan Taylor, who returned last June after a three years' stay in the land of gaucho, horses and palm trees.

Taylor, who is in the college of law, was sent to South America as a Mormon missionary. He spent a year and a half living in Buenos Aires, and, the rest of the time gauched for the Argentine Pump.

One-fourth of the population of Argentina has settled down to a rather peaceful life in Buenos Aires, he said. The city folks dress as we do, however, in the interior, it is a different story. The gauchos, who are equivalent to western cowboys, gallop about on small, sturdy horses with mantas draped across their shoulders. What we might call a masculine form of costumes are known in Argentina as "bombachas."

Dress is Colorful.

The women dress for the Pump in much the same manner as American fashion does not for the beach. They wear white muscals ad graceful blue skirts—the southern color.

Though not noticeable to the casual observer the gauchos are adequately armed. Inspection would reveal a knife usually tucked away in the belt of their sashes.

The Spanish girls who, according to Taylor, are "very beautiful," are carefully chaperoned. Courtship involves a procedure which takes about a year. Three months are spent in exchanging sly glances during the evening while judged by all South Americans. At the end of that time the boy may take the girl home each evening for about three months. At last the girl's mother will ask the boy into the house where they spend their evenings under the watchful eye of a chaperone. Finally after the engagement has been announced, the couple may at last sneak off for a private kiss.

Gay Carnivals.

Carnival time is the gayest season of the year in Argentina. The carnival begins in the middle of May and continues for three hilary days. To people dress in varied costumes and fill the streets. The first two days are devoted en masse to confetti throwing, on the last day real flowers are showered along the streets. Small vials containing perfume are tossed near unsuspecting merry makers, having a malicious odor. During carnival time chaperones are dispensed with and adoring boys and girls may dance to their hearts content.

The South Americans have

Debaters To Go To McMinville

Each team will debate at least six times; three on the affirmative and three on the negative.

Evans, Kinney, Ravenmore, and Greely, are west officers of the oratorical and extemporaneous speaking contest, both of which represent the school's interest in the impromptu, speaking contest.
