Communique Comment

Concentration of Japanese naval vessels in the waters near New Britain Island may indicate that the Tokyo strategy plan to follow up the attack on the U.S. Midway Island will be realized. The Japanese have already held a portion of Nead Island and possession of New Caledonia is part of an American program for strengthening the defense of the islands which Japan holds.

Emperor Hirohito's military and naval staffs may have decided to strike at New Caledonia, the New Hebrides, Fiji and Samoa before U.S. army and air forces can consolidate their positions on these islands.

The extent of the Japanese fleet in the southwestern Pacific is not known. The tactical skill shown by the Japanese admirals has enabled the enemy to make a successful attack on the U.S. fleet. The日本's strategic success has allowed them to attack our forces in the southern Pacific and to move against our forces in the western Pacific. A shortage of supply vessels would make it hard for the enemy to seize and hold outlying bases east and south of the Solomon Islands.

Fiction between General MacArthur and the U.S. Navy in regard to strategy seems to have played its part in the establishment of our naval headquarters for the southwest, located in the Wake Islands rather than Australia. The range of MacArthur's command. Excellent co-ordination of land and sea operations has been one key to Japan's success in the recent conquest of the southern Philippines and the Dutch East Indies. The warfare of battleship seems to have stabilized the British government in Norway and Ceylon and enforced constant cooperation between their military and naval commanders. It would be unfortunate if this demonstration of our communications with Australia were to be dampened at the time when an enemy threat is imminent by the type of inter-service jealousy that helped Britain to lose the Malay Peninsula and Singapore.

When you're flying, the big bombers across the ocean, you don't want jangled nerves. These verses at the right are Camel smokers. Name caused by Robert Perry Command. The captain (nearest camera), a Tennessean, says: "I smoke a lot in this job. CAMELS are extra mild with plenty of flavor."
