U. S. Army Postpones Arrival Of Engineers Indefinitely

Postponed for an untold number of days, the arrival of the army engineers is absolutely in doubt, President Dale stated this week.

In a telegram received from the Service Command at Fort Douglas, Utah, it was announced that the initial unit will not arrive on April 3 as previously expected. No explanation was given as to any reason for the delay. The group is expected to arrive at the Department of Chemistry.

During the coming spring and summer, the U.S. Senate will have the opportunity to help in laying the groundwork for permanent peace. The project for an Allied Council that will aid the U.S. to post-war co-operation with the other United Nations, has led already to declarations by members of the upper chamber which show that a strong group of senators will attack bitterly any plan that does not leave our country complete freedom of action in foreign policy after this conflict. If this bloc succeeds in its opposition to the resolution introduced on Monday by two Republicans and two Democrats, some important step will have been taken in turning the world into the path that leads directly to a Third World War.

Talks between Foreign Secretary Eden, Ambassador Litvinov, and the heads of our State Department this week look toward the forging of closer bonds between Britain, the Soviet Union, and the U.S. Neither Britain nor the U.S. is going to work earnestly for the establishment of a system of international security after the war if it seems probable that after the current hostilities our country will return to a policy of isolationism, as it did in 1919. The decision made by our Senate in 1919 will be more influential when Americans can realize at this time in moulding the foreign policy of the great powers of the world for the next half century.

U.S. public opinion is hard to change at this moment. Of course, discussion of this-war problems leads to the confusion in a large part to a small minority that born with those on the uninvolved that of both practical idealists in the President's Wallaces. Certain American business interests are spreading propaganda in that designed to convince people that the final peace settlement must grant to U.S. air transport company extensive domination of the world and the whole. One hope of those American papers is spreading the Gospel of an "American Century," which the nations of the earth will let them or work together under the superintendence of Wall Street and Washington.

The result of this week at our national capital take us back to the debates of 1919-20, when Senator Lodge and the men of Idaho helped to create the spirit to which the conditions in 1919 awoke. Now in the country, there is not a single voter for which the Senate in 1919 the same as for the Senate of 1919, which the nations of the earth will let them work together under the superintendence of Wall Street and Washington.
