It Isn't Gravy At All

"The only thing a vet was doing in college is riding that horse around the track," said one of the men. "And they're not going to let them do that because of this budget thing."

"It's just not something that we can do with our tax dollars."

"They're going to have to make a decision about what is important and what isn't," said another.

"But I think we should give them some room to work with," said a third.

"And we need to start thinking about how we can support our local colleges in a meaningful way," said a fourth.

Idaho Looks Ahead

The State of Idaho is at risk of losing its advantage in education. In the twenty-first century, colleges and universities are facing numerous challenges, and it is up to the state to support them.

"We need to start looking at how we can support our local colleges in a meaningful way," said the governor. "It's important that we not only support them, but also make sure that they are able to continue to provide the best possible education to our students."

DON'T QUOTE ME
By GENN ROOK

The signing of Dixie Howell and his assistant looks like a big deal to the Idaho basketball fans. Just ask any man turning out for spring football practice and he'll tell you "how Coaches Allen and Idahonian have been working hard to get this team ready for the season." There are about 30 football players enthusiastic, ready to play.

The little Idaho has been a big story for the past few years, but that doesn't mean they're not interested in basketball. Before this year, spring practice for the Idaho basketball team was usually considered a waste of time by many fans. This year, however, the team is different.

For the first time, Idaho has more than just one or two coaches on the field to handle the candidates. After about 15 minutes of practice, there were about 30 candidates on the court with Bob Kesten, Popo Shoemaker, Steve Bell and Gene Lobo running the boys through the drills. And what a grist it was.

The Idaho basketball team is at the upper echelon of college basketball. Their record in the past few years has been excellent, and they are looking forward to another successful season. It is believed that they will be able to compete with the best teams in the country.

The Idaho basketball team will be playing in the National Basketball Association this season, and they are expected to do well. They have a strong team, with many experienced players, and they are well coached.

The Idaho basketball team is also looking forward to the future. They have a young team, with many promising players, and they are working hard to develop their skills. They believe that they will be able to win many games this season, and they are looking forward to a successful season.
