Business Students, Book Buyers

Move Slowly

Business students and book buyers have been bearing the brunt of the registration line moves. A new draft of the registration line moves was held on February 4, but it is still too early to tell how many students will be affected.

An Historical Line on Lines

To the ambitious students who wake up at 6:00 every morning and who walk to class for two and a half hours for the registration line, the Argonaut, respectfully, dedicates this issue of the campus newsletter (May 20).

Lines are not only a tradition on this campus; they are also a part of school life. Lines begin when the school starts. Students might be lined up in the morning for their breakfast or after school for their dinner. In most cases, lines are necessary to ensure that everyone has the opportunity to participate in various school activities.

Another famous line is the one Mark Twain talked about. This line is about a boy who was always lining up to be first in line for the lunchroom.

Lines even range in Central Africa, where people are told to line up for a variety of reasons, such as getting food or accessing educational institutions.

Twenty more words, such as a line-up and line breaking are also effective ways to reduce lines. It is important to follow rules and avoid cutting lines.

A Licking Sometimes Helps

In the early 1800's, a 'ringing' and glistening percolator injected New York City, stirring much excitement. The percolator was a device that allowed tea to be boiled in a pot, which was then poured over a filter, producing a refreshing beverage.

Meanwhile, in the same year, a young man named Horace Greeley began his career as a newspaper editor at the New York Tribune, where he published his first editorial, urging the abolition of slavery.

Greeley's influence continued to grow as he became a prominent figure in American politics, serving as a United States Senator and as a candidate for President of the United States.

Girl Dates German Exchange Student From South Idaho

Carol Fugate, Karpe Alpha Theta, is just a little bit close to the nationality of a man from whom she accepted a Thursday "vite date."

In all started two weeks ago when Ms. Fugate was introduced to "ingham" young man from Franklin, Germany, who said he was Horst Schmidt, a student attending school in Wyoming State College.

Mr. Schödtelt's spent a week in the States and in this time, Fugate couldn't speak a word of German. She evidently didn't understand the student very well except his willingness to help her. She also found that he was a very able student and a perfect gentleman.

Madame Fugate's invitations were warmly accepted by the student and he gladly agreed to meet her again on a day later. He was to be present at the German party and she was to be present at the American party.

Von Preiser's invitation, it was agreed that the two would meet and discuss the various activities of their respective countries. They will meet and discuss the history of their countries and the comparison of their ways of life.

Idaho Modernizes Its Labs With Surplus Equipment

By PALMER

St. Paul, Minn. — (AP) — The surplus equipment that has been gathering dust in the laboratory is being used to modernize the Idaho State University's science laboratories.

Most of the material has been donated by the federal government, with the university in turn donating it to the science department of the Idaho State University.

Much of the material has been donated by the federal government, with the university in turn donating it to the science department of the Idaho State University.

This material will be used to construct the new science laboratories at the university, which will be completed in the fall of 1943.

Gove Represents An Era

Hundreds of people gathered in the town of the Administrators and students to watch the inauguration of Mr. Gove as the 18th President of the University on April 11, 1922. This was a significant moment for the University of Idaho, as the new president would be responsible for guiding the institution through a period of rapid expansion and growth.

In his address, Mr. Gove emphasized the importance of education and the need for the University to continue to serve its communities and prepare its students for leadership roles in society.

Dear Jason

January 27, 1942

On the page three columns in the upper right corner of the Argonaut there is an announcement that states that a girl was offered to the school. We would like to know who it is that "Chocolates" before we return to school to take care of it.

We would like to know what is going on in the student body before we return to school to continue with our studies.

Frustratingly yours,

Bill Peters

Stockmen Attend Short Course

Students from the Argonaut staff, who have been working in the area of Idaho since the fall term, and who are members of the University of Idaho, have been invited to attend the University of Idaho short course on agriculture.

The course, which opened on February 1, 1942, was devoted to topics such as crop and field work.

Current crop problems, including the planting and pruning of corn, were discussed.

"I'm seeing my paycheck," said Mr. Peters, as he looked at his bill.

Duck School

Towson, Idaho

Sitting in the student body, Towson is a place to enjoy the company of fellow students and to participate in a wide range of activities. The university offers a variety of clubs and organizations, as well as a range of extracurricular activities, including sports and social events.

The university is located in the heart of the city, with easy access to all of the city's transportation systems.

The campus is home to a vibrant community of students, faculty, and staff, all of whom are committed to creating an environment that is welcoming and supportive for all.

The rain was pouring down in the middle of the game, and the players were struggling to maintain their footing on the slippery court.

But despite the conditions, the game continued, with the teams拼死拼活地 playing hard for every possession.

The rain eventually subsided, and the players were able to gain better traction on the court.
