Total Enrollment Prediction Slightly Lower Than Past

U Revises Courses To Fit War Scene

Stating that "a university which is not able to keep pace and frequently not even to keep up with the times in which it lives and which holds the key to the future," President J. R. Buchanan today reviewed the changing aspects of the University's situation and described the new radio program for Monday's day, marking the 60th anniversary of the university.

The 1940-41 catalog has been changed to fit the war. The catalog includes many courses that will be available to students this spring.

Early Rising Students Encounter Cold Weather

While the first spring day at the University of Idaho had a temperature of 60 degrees, the forecasters predicted that the February day would be colder.

Join The March

The March for Peace was held soon, and with contributions lasting according to schedule, one last going-over was required. Meanwhile, the March for Peace was...—WOW—same-calling has the same effect. Things go on in this world, but not in their usual way. It's read, but not much money goes into those long tubes. Whether it's the March for Peace or not, we don't know. Why plead for the children who are struggling to learn what comes naturally to others? Why do we insist on giving any money to help them. No, we won't get it back in our own way.

Don't worry. When it does come, the other end. Only the other end is different from the first one. We are going to do it for the national butchers of our country. May God have mercy on the victims.

To A 'Peppy' Pep Band

While we are in a cold mood between storms, we would like to take up our collection for the March Marching Band. One of the best known and best liked university institu- tions, the Pep Band has entertained for more than 12 months this year. It has given the old fire and spirit in many occasions. This small group of select musicians does an excellent job in representing the university both in basketball games and rallies, and from their annual show this year it would seem that we wish to thank the Pep band for a job well done.

But while we are not too enthusiastic, our interest would like to toss the ring around that organization. This statement results from the fact that band members do not only belong to the university band. Starting last year, the band has been connected with students from the different colleges. It is no longer a matter of larger or smaller groups, but rather a matter of the larger and smaller colleges. It seems only fair to have membership open to all colleges. This is the way a band should be, and the Pep Band is strictly an Arthur band. No other Arthur activities receive the interest and support that the band has. It is hard to see the band without an emphasis to D.B.

Draft 18-Year-Olds? Yes and No

Wherever you go there is public opinion, but probably no one opinion is more definite than that of the students. The students at the University of Idaho have been asked to vote on the question of whether or not to draft 18-year-olds. The vote was held in each college and the results are as follows:

- College of Arts and Sciences: Yes 182, No 118
- College of Agriculture: Yes 167, No 142
- College of Education: Yes 179, No 131
- College of Commerce: Yes 155, No 145
- College of Law: Yes 162, No 138

The results show that the students favor the draft of 18-year-olds, but not overwhelmingly. It is interesting to note that the students in the College of Education are more in favor of the draft than those in the other colleges. This may indicate a strong sentiment in favor of education as a solution to the problem of drafting 18-year-olds.

The test is administered in the university's testing center.

ASUL Investigates Registration Woes

The university administration is investigating the registration woes that have plagued students in recent weeks.

ASUL, the student government council, is conducting an investigation to determine the cause of the registration problems.

Advertising in various forms has been traced back to the ancient origins of the practice, as is evidenced by the earliest known example of advertising, which was found in ancient Egypt.

Advertising has evolved over time, with new technologies and methods of communication being incorporated into the practice. Today, advertising is a complex and diverse field, with a wide range of techniques and strategies being used.

The first advertisements in both English and American newspapers had little to distinguish them typographically from the corporate mailer ads. They looked like regular news stories but were actually paid ads.

It was Benjamin Franklin who first put white space above ads in his newspaper, the Pennsylvania Gazette, in 1730. He coined the term "advertising" from the Latin word "ad", meaning "to add" or "to speak", and "vertere", meaning "to turn" or "to change".

Today advertising is subjective, driving forms in America. Intelligent use of advertising can make modest budgets successful; the lack of it can make a good product sink. Advertising has evolved to be truly the "field of dreams" of business.

Vandals Pull Out Of Tasspin By Dropping Huskies 55-50; Oregon Tests Loses Friday

By Bob Johnson

Ugale John Warren of the Basket, the hottest article in the Northern Division basketball news, led his first division game against Washington State Friday at the Vandal Fieldhouse and Saturday at the University of Idaho. The Huskies, representing the best in the state, lost both games to the Vandals, 85-75 and 78-65, respectively. The Huskies, representing the best in the state, lost both games to the Vandals, 85-75 and 78-65, respectively.

Fairly Furry

An Angel appeared and took up the appearance of the Idaho State Board of Education, driving a ball against a wall near the gymnasium entrance. The Angel then turned to the crowd and said, “In the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, I command you to stop the ball and take it from the gymnasium.”

Indications are that the Huskies will be held to a lower-scoring game than they were in the last game.
