Brewster's December 1958 and January 1961, Pratt & Whitney American Airlines, who pioneered trans-Atlantic service with Pratt & Whitney engines, will put into passenger service every Boeing 707 and every Douglas DC-8 for trans-Atlantic flights. This fleet of airplanes will be powered by engines designed and developed by Pratt & Whitney Airplanes.

Behind this significant achievement is the continued engineering manpower, the development of a jet-fueled airplane, and the exploitation of a new era in commercial aviation.
