Wrong Way Soph. Takes Roundabout Route to Pocatello

Air travel is supposed to be the most direct of modern means of transportation.

This week we Idaho sophomores discovered a direct route to Pocatello, Idaho, which was supposed to be the easiest way to get there.

We planed to leave Lewiston by the earliest shuttle bus, head west on the old 19th century road over the Sheep Creek pass, then take the scenic route along the St. Joe River, and finally arrive in Pocatello before sunset.

But the shuttle bus was late, the road was closed due to snow, and we had to take a detour through the pine forests. It was a long journey, but we finally arrived in Pocatello just before sunset.

We had a good time exploring the town and visiting Bingham hall on campus, but the next day we had to take a flight back to Lewiston. It was a roundabout route, but we had a good time anyway.
