On The Way Out

Status Of NSA
Hangs In Doubt

An ASU evaluation committee that visited last week is expected to recommend to the Board of Trustees that the National Student Association (NSA) and its statewide organization be dissolved.

The committee, which met at the ASU campus in Tempe, was expected to complete its work today. It will then submit its recommendation to the Board of Trustees, which is scheduled to meet next month.

The NSA, which represents more than 200,000 students at state universities, has been under financial pressure for several years. The organization has been unable to raise enough funds to cover its operating costs, and its membership has declined sharply.

The NSA has been struggling to maintain its role as a voice for student concerns and to provide a platform for student leaders to express their views.

The organization has also been criticized for its lack of transparency and accountability, which has led to questions about its financial practices and governance.

The Evaluation Committee will make its recommendation to the Board of Trustees, which will then decide whether to dissolve the NSA and its statewide organization. The decision will likely have significant implications for student representation and advocacy at ASU and other universities across the state.
Cooperation Is The Key

(From The Idaho Press-Tribune, April 6, 1972)

There is no question that the efforts of many people have contributed to the development of a cooperative spirit among the citizens of the state of Washington. This is particularly true in the area of education, where the Washington State University and the University of Idaho have worked together to provide a quality education for students from both institutions.

The Cooperative Extension Service has been instrumental in promoting cooperation between these two universities. The Service has played a key role in facilitating projects that benefit both institutions, and has helped to create a sense of community among students and faculty.

The Cooperative Extension Service has also been involved in promoting cooperation between the two universities in the area of research. The Service has helped to fund joint research projects, and has provided a platform for sharing information and ideas.

In conclusion, the efforts of the Washington State University and the University of Idaho to promote cooperation have been successful. The cooperation between these two institutions has resulted in improved education and research opportunities for students and faculty, and has benefited the entire community.

Hyper-socialized Nit Wit is Underated

(From The Idaho Press-Tribune, April 6, 1972)

The Nit Wit is a type of person who is often overlooked in society. They are often considered to be insignificant and unimportant, but in reality they are crucial to the functioning of society.

The Nit Wit is a person who is able to maintain a sense of humor and a positive outlook on life. They are often able to see the good in a situation, and are able to find joy in the simple things.

The Nit Wit is also a person who is able to connect with others on a personal level. They are often able to understand the feelings of others, and are able to provide support and encouragement.

In conclusion, the Nit Wit is an essential part of society. They are often overlooked, but their positive influence on others is immeasurable. The Nit Wit is a person who should be celebrated and acknowledged for their contributions to society.

More Nine Miles' Is Fact, Not Magic, For Idaho Hikers

(From The Idaho Press-Tribune, April 6, 1972)

For many years, Idaho hikers have been searching for the elusive Nine Mile, a phenomenon that is said to be located on the Nine Mile Creek in Nine Mile Valley.

Recent scientific studies have shown that Nine Mile is not a real place, but rather a series of natural phenomena that are created by the unique geology of the area. These phenomena include a series of natural bridges and rock formations that are created by the movement of the earth.

In conclusion, the search for Nine Mile has been a waste of time and resources. The scientific community has now come to realize that this phenomenon is not real, and that the search for Nine Mile has been a futile endeavor.
