Looking For A Home

A former Idaho football end who used to call himself out in defense has come up with a plan to advance baseball in a different way. In his recent attempt to launch a new baseball league, John Patterson, the 48-year-old baseball writer of the Idaho Statesman, is currently operating at an air force base in Idaho, and he has begun to build a new ballfield conference.

He has worked out a tentative league of baseball teams that would be operated on the professional level. The league would be made up of four teams, one each from the West Coast, the Midwest, the Southeast, and the Southwest.

But Patterson points out that all four of the league's teams would have to be organized in order to make it a worthwhile venture. And, the four leagues would have to be organized in such a way as to make it a worthwhile venture.

"It's a good plan, but it just can't be done," he says. "Money is the problem. And even if we could afford to build the field, it would be too expensive to maintain it." Patterson said.

As a basis for including the hotel in their proposal, Patterson pointed out that the hotel would be located at the Idaho Statesman office within the city.
