University of Idaho students are about to work 175 hours a week, according to a new study on student workload and job hours released by the National Center for Education Statistics. The study found that Idaho students spend an average of 12.5 hours per week on work, with nearly half of those hours spent on jobs related to their studies. With an average of 15.7 hours per week, students in Idaho spend more time on work than students in other states. Idaho students are also more likely to work more than 20 hours per week than students in other states. This is a significant issue, as it can impact students' ability to focus on their studies and can lead to burnout and stress. It is important for universities to consider ways to reduce the workload and job hours for students, such as by providing more financial aid and by increasing the availability of on-campus jobs.
