Lack Of Sport Bench Rules

Lack of sport was the reason for the team's 17-17 tie with the University of Oregon.

Curtis Johnson, Idaho's head coach, said the team could have scored more if they had gone for the win. The team had a chance to win the game, but they chose to go for a tie instead.

Johnson said the team's lack of sport was due to their inability to score points. The team had several opportunities to score, but they chose not to take the risk.

Johnson said the team would work on their sport during the off-season and be ready to go for the win in the next game.
AFROTC Policy Change Is Explained

Colonel Richardson, architect of the AFROTC development program, has announced that all ROTC personnel of the AFROTC throughout the country are now free to participate in any activities of their choice. He is also a special address delivered by Captain James C. Turner of the Illinois National Guard at a public meeting in Chicago on May 23, 1965.

The purpose of the address was to explain the reasoning behind the recent changes in the AFROTC, its mission, and the effect of this new policy on the participants. Captain Turner stated that the AFROTC has been established to provide leadership in the community and to promote patriotism among the youth. The changes will allow the participants to choose their own activities and interests, which will make the program more attractive to them.

The new policy includes a number of changes, such as the elimination of the requirement to take ROTC classes, the reduction of the time commitment, and the opportunity to join other organizations. These changes will make the program more flexible and allow the participants to choose the activities that best suit their interests.

Western Enrollment Cliffs

Record enrollment figures for the 1965-1966 academic year were reported by the University of Idaho today. Western students comprise a significant portion of the student body, and their numbers have been increasing steadily over the past few years. This year, the number of Western students enrolled at the University of Idaho reached an all-time high, with over 2,000 students from the Western region.

The increase in Western enrollment is attributed to a number of factors, including the growth of the Western economy, the availability of scholarships, and the University's efforts to attract Western students. The University has implemented a number of initiatives to make Western students feel welcome, including Western-specific programs and events.

Challenges Ahead

After a successful year, the University of Idaho faces a number of challenges as it moves forward into the next academic year. The University must continue to attract Western students, while also ensuring that the quality of education remains high. This requires a continued focus on curriculum development, faculty recruitment, and student support services.

Grads Lack Backgrounds

Fortune magazine surveyed 1,000 college students, taking into account, and colleges are giving less fundamental training in information skills that are now essential. "They'll be out there in the labor market, and if they don't have background, they're all on their own," said one respondent. "We need to help our students develop these skills so that they can compete in the job market."
