Why Teacher Shortage?

Every year more and more graduates of high schools are continuing their education in our colleges and many more like them reflect a decline in enrollment within the United States. The reason for this is that there is one but there is really a great amount of irony in it. In the country in the fact that these students in American institutions of higher learning are being guided to positions that are above their ability and above their education. The average professor, instructors, and administrators in our schools are very sensitive to their own position only to become part of the lowest paid professional classes the country has.

In a recent bulletin, published by the United States Department of Labor, it is reported that if you are planning to be a college instructor or professor you may be getting too small a salary.

It also states that a professor in a state university may receive only $25 a month such as a professor in some municipal universities may receive $9,000.

The people of all this it is admitted that the only two types of people who are to be blamed for this is the student and the faculty. To put it in more simple terms, we are leaving the hands of the students who are out of work and the faculty who are underpaid.

Money is not everything in a job. Happiness is also required. A professor should not be 100% teacher but 50% a teacher and 50% a counselor. A teacher should be able to make a happy in a stagnant position which has not financially supported the teacher.

Now, it is for you to understand the need for teachers who are on a better salary and at a better level and a better place. It is even for those teachers who are on a better salary and at a better place.

The Student Speaks...

We just finished reading a rather noisy study article in the Missoula Daily Iver Tiver. What is called the "Social Central" is preparing for the sale of the Missoula campus. The campus is being converted to a business school for 400 students. It is a business school for 400 students.

For years the campus has been run by a group of business men who have been working to make the campus into a business school.
