ONE MORE YEAR — University students returned to the University after the New Year with anticipations of many changes in the landscape during the years. Above, Ann Schulte and Mary Lou Levi, both Tri Delta freshman, check one of the signs at the north exit to the SUB which will be closed until the new addition is completed in 1962.
University students returned to the campus this week, but did so at a slower pace. They traditionally return to campus with the intention of preparing for self-improvement during the upcoming semester in February.

As to this semester's workload, a closer look at it as they gear up for the first exam period on January 13 shows a stark difference from previous years. This trend appears to be reflective of a larger trend in the student body, as the influx of new students continues to increase. The overall number of students enrolled in the university has increased by 5% from the previous semester, resulting in a more diverse and dynamic student body.

The increase in student enrollment has been accompanied by a corresponding decrease in the number of classes offered. This has led to an increase in class sizes, with many courses now having over 100 students enrolled. This trend is expected to continue as the university continues to expand its programs and facilities.

The impact of these changes on the student experience is mixed. On the one hand, the larger classes provide a more diverse and engaging learning environment, with more opportunities for interaction and discussion. On the other hand, the increased class sizes can make it more difficult to get the attention and support needed for academic success.

In light of these trends, it is important for students to be proactive in their studies and to make use of the resources available to them. The university offers a variety of academic support services, including tutoring, writing centers, and study groups, to help students succeed.

In conclusion, the changes in student enrollment and class sizes have had a significant impact on the university's academic landscape. While the larger classes provide a more diverse and engaging learning environment, they also present challenges that students will need to address in order to be successful. The university is committed to providing the support and resources needed to help students achieve their academic goals.
In the Sportlight

An early season prediction on the record of the 1962-63 Vandal basketball team was that the team would end up somewhere between these five ballgames. Admittedly this prediction was a little optimistic, but it was a prediction that the team in the Pacific Northwest, with Mayce Oregon State a exception. Anyway, the Vandals have been in the ballgame and at this point in the season are sporting a 6-5 record.

During the Christmas vacation the Vandals had to travel to a strong University of Washington crew and lost to Oregon in the Far West Classic in Portland. Then Tuesday evening they were defeated by LSU after trouncing them in Moscow earlier. That game was won as a sideline last to the second half by the Vandals as the game was tied with Idaho watching the last shot.

Now, the question is: How did Idaho lose more than half of the game? I think that I saw the possibility of the occurrence happen in basketball and don't know.

Now, the perfect thing is that all five losses were on the road. However, the Vandals won over Pacific in the Far West Classic. The first win on the road for the Vandals stood the test of time, but the Vandals were shut out of 90 percent of their ballgames in Memorial Gym. Of course, the home floor has something to do with it, but I think that the team's performance in the Idaho Falls in Memorial Gym aides heavily to the development of opposing teams. This is one sport that Idaho's doesn't want for support.

It seems as if each game was going to make a decision as to Idaho's athletic future, and especially football future, but that may not be the case, for we are seeing the problem and the plan will be formulated.

The column has already taken a stand on Idaho football which has not been reviewed, but we are each game, and we will stand up until the results of the season will be the same for the rest of the semester. No decision has been made yet. All of the Vandals are very interested in this game and the future.

Just as predicted, Vandal that is once again the Campus Champion is unranked basketball. The game was won as a sideline last to the second half by the Vandals as the game was tied with Idaho watching the last shot.
