The faculty today held its usual last words and said, concentrating attention, a high fever.

There were resounding features. Most of the professors participating in the last lecture were occupied with their studies. Some were occupied with their own studies. However, as Guy Wells, faculty advisor for the event pointed out, it was not to be welcomed to continue if there are more family and student leaders at the retreat than there are freshmen. This was almost the same last lecture only as only around 100 students showed up.

The point that should be made is that the retreat should be canceled or its place should be taken by a few freshwomen and the freshmen who are remains as uninterested and definitely benefited from the program.

Play Feature
Is Costumes

One of the features of this ASP production "Madame butterfly" is the variety of costumes used. Cast members will all be wearing different and often eccentric outfits.

"The story of the play is a Parisian one," Cast member said. "And of course, we were told that fashion in the late 1800s was both avant-garde and quite the oddity. We've tried to capture that in our looks." The costumes were designed by Mrs. Iris Shoup, costume designer for the show.

"I had to find inspiration from various sources - high fashion, street wear, and historical references," Mrs. Shoup said. "The goal was to create a look that was both striking and plausible in the context of the story." The costumes will be on display in the Rainbow Room beginning Thursday evening.

One will be Queen - Navy ROTC students were hired at a rate of four dollars for each costume that was worn.
