U-I Budget Outlook Not Bright—Corlett

The University of Idaho “will be lucky” if the Legislature gives it all the money it asked for, according to the Idaho Argonaut's political editor, Robert A. Corlett, who said in his weekly newsletter that the Legislature has been reluctant during its two previous sessions to allocate all the money that the University asked for. This year, Corlett said, the University will receive only 10 cents of each dollar it asked for.

Corlett said that the University asked for $300,000 for the coming academic year, but the Legislature has only approved $30,000. This leaves the University with a $270,000 budget deficit.

Corlett also noted that the University's budget is in a state of flux due to the ongoing negotiations with the union representing the University’s non-academic employees, the University Employees Union (UEU).
