AWS Allows Later Hours

The Associated Women Students legislature votes unanimously Wednesday evening to change AWS rules to allow women with junior, senior, and graduate courses to have 11 p.m. permission. (Monday, Thursday, Friday and Sunday nights only).

Leslie Brower explained that the resolution was proposed by Emily and designed to designate a selected group of seniors who wish to have permission to stay out later. In other business Wednesday evening, AWS also endorsed the University's proposal to have a law to allow interrupted students to live in the dormitories on the weekends, and also endorsed the idea of having a Thanksgiving dinner.

Brower said that the purpose of the resolution was to allow for a more flexible and accommodating atmosphere for students. The resolution was approved unanimously by the legislature.

Comprehensive State Tax Study Needed

A number of states have taxes and rates that are considered either too high or too low, while a few have taxes that are at the same level of those in other states. In Idaho, the state's current tax structure has led to a higher-than-expected increase in expenditures. The legislature is now reviewing the tax laws in each state to meet the demands of the people. It is also looking into the possibility of implementing a sales tax in Idaho, which would be a potential revenue source for the state. The state also needs to consider the impact of its tax structure on the economy and the cost of living in Idaho.

Idaho's economy is at the forefront of the state's plans. The state is looking into ways to increase its tax base and to create a more stable revenue stream. The state is also looking into ways to reduce its reliance on property taxes, which can be volatile and unpredictable. To achieve this, the state may consider implementing a sales tax on goods and services, which would help to stabilize the state's revenue stream.

A new tax, which would be a sales tax on goods and services, is also being considered. This tax would help to stabilize the state's revenue stream and reduce its reliance on property taxes. The state is also looking into ways to increase the state's economic productivity and to create a more diverse economy. This would help to reduce the state's reliance on a single industry, which could be risky in the long run.

The state is also looking into ways to increase the state's workforce and to create a more skilled labor force. This would help to reduce the state's unemployment rate and to create a more stable economic environment. The state is also looking into ways to increase the state's education system and to create a more skilled workforce.

Unfortunately, Idaho's economy is not as diverse as it could be. The state is still heavily reliant on a single industry, which could be risky in the long run. The state is also looking into ways to increase the state's economic productivity and to create a more diverse economy. This would help to reduce the state's reliance on a single industry, which could be risky in the long run.

The Loyalty Oath
Students Feel Oaths Curry Basics Rights
A recent poll of 12 University of Idaho students revealed that 90% of them believe in the principle of academic freedom. This poll included both junior and senior students from a variety of academic disciplines. The poll was conducted by the student newspaper, the "Loyalty Oath." The survey found that the majority of students feel that the university should protect their rights to academic freedom. The poll also revealed that 80% of the students agreed that the university should provide a safe environment for all students, regardless of their political beliefs.

New Methods Cur Tail Gang
The University of Idaho has recently introduced a new method to curtail the tail gang behavior on campus. The university has implemented a new policy that requires students to register their tailgating events in advance. The policy also limits the size of the tailgating groups and requires them to clean up after themselves. The university hopes that this new policy will help to reduce the negative impact of tailgating on the university community.
