When a student is asked what he or she is going to major in, a common response is, "I don't know." But when asked what the student would like to major in, the response is often, "I don't know." This dilemma, of looking up the answer to a question you have, is a common occurrence.

In a society where knowledge is power, it is easy to see why people are afraid to admit they do not know the answer to a question. However, this fear of ignorance is not unique to humans. Animals also experience it. For example, rats have been shown to be afraid of entering a dark room even if they have been trained to do so.

Common Practice

According to the U.S. Department of Labor, 70% of all workers are currently engaged in some form of work activity. This means that many people will spend most of their lives working.

"There isn't an institution of higher learning in the nation that doesn't have a major in something," said Dr. Robert Ford, professor of education at the University of Idaho. "But when you look at the statistics, you see that only about 3% of the population holds a college degree."

The reason for this is not that people don't want to go to college, but rather that they don't have the means to do so. In fact, the cost of tuition for a four-year college degree is now over $20,000 per year.

The dilemma of looking up the answer to a question you have is not limited to students. It is also a problem for people in the workforce.

Trying To Prove

We would all like to be known for what we are trying to prove. It is not as if the University were overemphasized with out-of-sate students. Undergraduates have been limited to 20% of the student body for many years. However, the University is now home to many of our out-of-sate students.

Local Interest

Perhaps the most notable change made by Cobbs is an attempt to stimulate the state's economy. Cobbs has been described as a "pro-business" governor, and his administration has placed a strong emphasis on economic development.

The local interest in Cobbs' administration is high, as most residents in the state have a stake in the future of their community. Cobbs' policies are designed to create jobs and stimulate the economy, and his efforts have been well-received by the people of Idaho.

The search for student talent is not confined to the state of Idaho. Many universities and colleges across the country have similar programs designed to attract students and boost the local economy.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, the dilemma of looking up the answer to a question you have is not limited to students. It is also a problem for people in the workforce. Cobbs' administration is making progress in stimulating the state's economy, but there is still much work to be done. The future of Idaho is in the hands of the students and their leaders, and it is up to them to take the lead and make our state even greater.
Bach Featured

Tuesday night’s faculty concert featuring pianist, Agnes Schumacher, tenor, Charles Walsh, and cellist, David Whitten, was an indubitably fine representation of the depth and talent of the University Department of Music and, indeed, illustrated the high degree of musical genius of three of your most admired students.

The scene, William Pfeiffer, Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach, and Johann Christian, talented and original composers in their own right, were more well known in their time than the older Bach. Indeed, Mrs. Schumacher, in a brief introduction to the musical presentation, said that she had seen Bach’s works during the transition period between the Baroque and the classical, and, retaining shades of influence from their father, but with new lyrical freedom and fluency, was able to build a bridge between the Baroque and the Classical. Review of the performances was generally favorable. However, the audience attended in style, and all were well pleased with the results.

The program included six piano sonatas performed by Mrs. Schumacher, two Fante-PCA in C and Rondo in D flat were especially interesting; Mrs. Schumacher’s was written for L. H. M. and the chorus of the Society of German Pianists. The period in music history following the graceful and melodic sonatas was by his son, Johann Christian, whose enthusiastic audience. The final selection included the three artists in a Scene and Rondo by Johann Christian Bach.

Sunday night’s performance proved it to be a triumph of all kinds.

Vandal Cagers Subdue Oregon In Opening Clash Of Season, 86-81

By Dick Sherman

Sports Writer

The Idaho Vandal cagers opened their 1964-65 season with an impressive 86-64 victory over the Oregon Ducks at the Ernie James Fieldhouse Wednesday night.

Bob Pichly, a Dodge City Junior College star, starred in a 31 point effort, which was high in both clubs. He had 12 boards from the field and was a 100 percent line man.

The Vandal had trouble finding the basket in the first half, hitting on only 11 of 44 shots for a 25 percent clip. In the second half Malms scored 86 points, hitting on 31 of 62 attempts.

This Turned

In the second half the Vandal’s turned the tide. After trailing 39 to 7 at halftime, Bob Pichly caught fire and exploded in a 14 point basket that brought them within one point of the lead. The Vandal then went on to lead all the way in the second half.

First team honors

Pichly was the first team all conference selection, while second team honors went to Mike Brender of St. Francis. The Vandals were picked by 11 of the 14 college basketball writers to the first team.
