The Loyalty oath's Official—All Quiet Saturday

May 18 (Saturday), the day Senate Bill 7, better known as the Loyalty Oath bill, was to meet in committee, thousands of students throughout the state attempted to call students' attention to the bill's passage by demonstrating. The bill, which requires potential university students—already many are not even attempting to go to higher education—have to sign a loyalty oath in order to attend college.

The meeting included a variety of speakers and performers, such as Francesca Classen, the Students for Liberty president. The outcome of the meeting is still uncertain, but it is clear that students are determined to fight against this bill.
