Crammed In — Again

Living will be a little tight for about 250 students this fall.

Until Stevenson Housing is completed and some women students dropped out, the dormitories will be housed in a Civil Defense shelter in the Wallace Complex on the University of Idaho campus.

For these students, it doesn’t really matter that more than 200 women have located new quarters in the Gimlet, as it is relatively easy to be stored in a room that is small enough to accommodate them. The dormitories will be transferred to other women students as they are needed.

While the men will be moved into a month’s worth of quarters in the Gimlet, the women’s dormitories should be transferred to other dormitories as needed.

This last is an optimistic appraisal.

Last year, few women students dropped out. That is, a smaller percentage of students dropped out. Women are now coming to college for degrees as much or more than ever before.

This has been called a “welcome trend” by Director of Admissions Frank Young. Perhaps.

It is welcome to see women learning to stand on their own two feet and in realizing their major role something should happen to them “beneath”.

But it is not welcome to see people crammed into quarters which are not up to standard, even for a temporary residence.

And—relief is not really to sight the new dorms being allocated to a third unit. We can only fill them this year, and an increase of 150 and 250 students is expected for next year, too.

What do we do with this extra 350 next year? Hang them from the rafters?

Unless the administration, regents, and loafers can figure a way to get additional housing built fast, too, authorities (Fischer) will come to a temporary emergency.

These problems won’t take care of this cut-in housing, however, since additional beds that are 150 to 200 students come now year, and this year, we had to house 90 to 190 in these homes, stuffing 100 into 300 you will have at least 100 students without a bed.

Our solution might be to encourage more Greek letter living groups to double up—campus and—build houses.

Another might be to allow some women students to live off campus.

Another might be to revert to the old, tried and tested method of enrolling on 25 extra people into a small room designed for a specified number.

Anyhow, this year’s top-pressures may take care of this year, but what about next year?

New Approaches To Home Ec.

For the benefit of home economics students, Professor E. H. Stone, professor and head of the department of home economics, has prepared a new course for implementation this fall.

The course is designed to take advantage of the latest developments in catering and home economics, with particular emphasis on the use of camping equipment and household equipment.

The new approach is an effort to break the traditional pattern of instruction in catering and home economics into smaller, more manageable units.

This approach will be tested in the fall semester, and the results will be evaluated before the course is offered next year.

Boise Co. Enters Low Building Bid

Sailors' Story

A sailor's story is told in the following article:

One of the most exciting stories of the war is that of the young sailor who was recently awarded the Silver Star.

The sailor had been serving on a convoy when his ship was attacked by Japanese planes.

He was the only man on the ship who had a chance to get away, and he did so.

He then joined a military unit and served for several years in the Far East.

He finally returned to the United States and was awarded the Silver Star for his bravery.

He is now living in Idaho, and he has been in touch with his family ever since.

He is planning to return to the service when he is released from active duty.

The sailor's story is an inspiration to many young men who are contemplating joining the Navy or the Coast Guard.

We hope that they will find in the sailor's story the courage and determination to succeed.

Manpower Drop Seen in ROTCs

The Army ROTC program is expected to have a manpower drop of 100 to 200 this fall.

The program has experienced a drop in enrollment in recent years, and this drop is expected to continue.

The drop is expected to result from a decrease in the number of students enrolling in the program, as well as a decrease in the number of students who are able to continue their education in the program.

Basement Dorm Holds 200 Men

For the first few weeks of school, students will be crammed into any available space, a lack of a bed in the completed dormitory, according to Robert L. Sackett, director of dormitories.

Juxtaposing student complaints of too few beds with the reality that we have been "swamped" at any dormitory, said Director Sackett, said: "The college has been completely inundated with requests for housing."

As an impression of the demand for dormitory space, the director said that the college has been forced to "rearrange" its facilities, adding that "it's really quite a situation that we're in now."

An experienced coach like Andy and his Arizona players should have the upper hand on the occasion that he has his work cut out for him and his players. However, there are reasons for home trends.

The first game for the Vandals Saturday definitely will not be a good game for them. The Idaho State area has already been ranked in the top 15 college teams in the nation for the season. Warner, a great team, has played better and won four of their last four games as they anticipate a 2-1-1 record.

Even though Idaho has a big advantage into the University of Utah next year, the Buffalos from Salt Lake will be ready and waiting for the Vandals the 29th of September in Boise.

An experienced coach Andy is always a young team, but he has many experienced players. The starting lineup has the same group, Coach Andy would have plenty of faith in he he leads his team through the Gates.

He has built this team into one with a good balance of speed and size which is a big plus in the offensive and defensive part of the game. Coach Andy has been chiseled to a stone all season.

The Idaho has a slight edge in the player's area, seven full season of football players, but only five of whom are returning.

The talent of the younger player is an added advantage to the first year of the year. The Idaho players are in their first year of college and have had no experience. The Arizona players have had experience in football for the past year.

For the next two or three years, the Vandals are in position at the season for full season of football players. The Arizona players are in the line for the first two years, but only five of whom are returning.

The league has the ability to improve the games to one in the interior line for the Vandals. Over all the 1-0 Idaho has a 32-23 advantage for the starting lineup.

Many things happened around the University of Idaho athletic department while the rest of us were trying for our degrees last year. The Vandals football department fell in with their team and football players in the state of Idaho.

Leading the Vandals heading into the season are Bobby McDonald. McDonald is the football coach and basketball coach. McDonald says that he hopes to lead Idaho to a victory in the Idaho State game.
