HOMECOMING

HOMECOMING'S WAY - Living groups across the campus have already begun preparing their floats for the annual Homecoming parade. Expected to be in attendance at the parade will be the Homecoming King, Wilbur H. Shue and Miss Homecoming, Pam Brown. Although the floats have not all been completed, preparations are proceeding in good order, according to Miss Brown, float chairman. The floats will be judged on Friday and winners announced early next week. Following the parade, all floats will be displayed in the Student Union for the students to view. Judging during the parade will be the HCORD executive board, chaired by Miss Brown. The parade, scheduled for October 8, will begin at 9 a.m. in front of North Hall and pass down University Drive to the Student Union Building. The northernmost section is a meeting place for the participants and where the floats will be lined up. The parade is to begin at 10 a.m.

ASU Student to present new general studies program

The general faculty of the university yesterday approved the new general education studies program for the university. The program, which will be effective next Fall for freshmen, is designed to fulfill many of the general education requirements for other colleges and universities. The program, which is a cooperative effort by faculty members, was authorized by the General Faculty. The program, which is designed to meet the needs of students who are not majoring in a single college or department, includes the following major areas:

1. Liberal arts and humanities
2. Social sciences
3. Natural sciences
4. Mathematics
5. Foreign languages
6. Business and economics
7. Education
8. Fine arts
9. Physical education
10. Professional training

The program is designed to provide a comprehensive and flexible approach to the needs of students who are not majoring in a single college or department. The program is also designed to provide a coherent and logical framework for the general education requirements of all students. The program is intended to provide a course of study that is both challenging and relevant to the needs of students who are majoring in a single college or department. in the past several issues I have called for more student rights. Perhaps now is the time to call for more student responsibility. With every new right or privilege that is granted to the student, a new responsibility is required.

Under the guise of "in loco parentis" the university has restricted students in an unjustified and unconstituted manner. However, "in loco parentis" was never intended to be in a new way. For it is now clear that the university has arbitrarily restricted students. It has acted as a parent and bailed in another area. Under this principle, students are not considered mature enough to control their lives and, therefore, are not completely responsible for their actions. The university has shielded students from the cold reality, preferring to play devil rather than respect the law.

Laws are intended to structure society in such a way that all members of society can live peacefully with each other. This is not to say that all laws are reasonable or even helpful. There may be laws which are self-defeating and, therefore, are not completely responsible for their actions. Thus, the university has shielded students from the cold reality, preferring to play devil rather than respect the law.

President Nixon launches history's biggest anti-drug, grass campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon announced Wednesday that all 50 states are to conduct "an intensive, year-round anti-drug campaign," a massive undertaking he described as a "national emergency."

Paying the most intensive drug battle in American history, Nixon said stand behind his approach to drug abuse and recovery. The program's three main objectives are: to curtail the drug use of children and youth; to increase the appreciation and understanding of the so-called "drug problem" throughout the country; and to provide a national framework for the treatment and prevention of drug abuse.

At a press conference, Nixon told the nation's governors and mayors: "We are going to work together to create a social environment that will enable us to take the first steps toward a drug-free America.

The president's new campaign is aimed at preventing drug use through education, counseling, and law enforcement. Nixon said he would use the campaign to help create a "nationwide system of drug education," including drug awareness programs in schools, colleges, and universities. He also announced that the federal government would provide $50 million in grants to states for drug education programs.

In addition to the national education campaign, Nixon said he would work with Congress to pass legislation that would make it easier for law enforcement agencies to prosecute drug offenders. He also announced that the government would increase funding for drug rehabilitation programs and treatment centers.

The White House said that the president's campaign would focus on four key areas:

1. Education: Nixon said he would work with states to develop a system of drug education that would be available to all schools.
2. Treatment: The president pledged to increase funding for drug treatment programs across the country.
3. Prevention: Nixon said he would work with Congress to pass legislation to prevent drug use among young people.
4. Law enforcement: The president announced that the federal government would increase funding for law enforcement agencies to combat drug use.

Nixon said the campaign would be a "total national effort," involving all levels of government and the private sector.

While some welcomed the president's campaign, others expressed skepticism. "We need more than just a campaign," said one critic. "We need a real commitment to fighting drug abuse."
