Vietnam--the case for disengagement

From The Somebody Observer

Editor's note: Thousands of Abbevillians joined with others across the nation this week in demonstrating for an early end to the Vietnam War. The aim of the "Vietman Moratorium" and the massive which underlines it, are we not now facing a situation different today than when last May's Ides, Franklin, Frus, who was one of the earliest opponents of the war. Here is the text of the demonstration.

The second year of the American Revolution the great William Pitt rose to fame in the House of Commons. So he it, which is in fact hostile, might, be declared, "you cannot conquer America by impatience." The mayoral of every effort is still more extravagantly. We are not less determined to do.

The American revolution was a violent action that was right and just. It was a national emergency that we had to meet. We had to meet it then, and we have to meet it now. The end of the revolution was not a victory, but a victory for the American people.

We have won the war, but we have not won the peace. The American Revolution was a war for independence. It was a war to create a new nation.

The American Revolution was a war for freedom. It was a war to create a new people.

The American Revolution was a war for justice. It was a war to create a new society.

The American Revolution was a war for equality. It was a war to create a new economy.

The American Revolution was a war for education. It was a war to create a new culture.

The American Revolution was a war for health. It was a war to create a new health care system.

The American Revolution was a war for peace. It was a war to create a world without war.

The American Revolution was a war for freedom of speech. It was a war to create a world where people could express their ideas freely.

The American Revolution was a war for freedom of religion. It was a war to create a world where people could practice their religion freely.

The American Revolution was a war for freedom of the press. It was a war to create a world where people could read and write freely.

The American Revolution was a war for freedom of the arts. It was a war to create a world where people could appreciate and create art freely.

The American Revolution was a war for freedom of science. It was a war to create a world where people could pursue scientific research freely.

Anarchy revisited

by Joe Allen.

From the first phrase, these words instantly evoke the need to reframe our understanding of civilisation and its dependencies. This is not a new concept, but it has gained renewed relevance in recent years, given its immense resonance in terms of the current existential crisis we face. The appeal of anarchism lies in its potential to transcend the limits of the existing political and economic systems, offering a path towards a more just and equitable society.

The "children" who are such innocents as Mr. Kissinger are the very dangerous when they are at their inexperience. President Johnson is the perfect model for this type of turncoat. He is the first to start the political machine, and the last to stop it. His duplicity is his strength, and his duplicity is his weakness. He is the master of disguise, and his duplicity is his tool. He is the master of the game, and his duplicity is his weapon.

The United States is not a country of the people, but a country of the politicians. The politicians are the masters, and the people are the slaves. The people are the dupes, and the politicians are the masters. The people are the dupes, and the politicians are the masters. The people are the dupes, and the politicians are the masters. The people are the dupes, and the politicians are the masters. The people are the dupes, and the politicians are the masters. The people are the dupes, and the politicians are the masters.

Do You Have a Poor Memory?

A good method in Chicago reports there is a simple technique for improving a poor memory. This method could influence others simply by reviewing it with them. A recent study by a group of psychologists at social services in a certain area was conducted with people who had poor memories. The group found that the most effective way to improve a memory was to keep a daily journal of what you wanted to remember. The next step is to review the journal regularly to refresh your memory. The study showed that people who kept a journal of what they wanted to remember were able to improve their memory significantly.

No Special Rights

For our country and the world, the right to be free is a sacred thing.
Some people have a right, others have no rights. Yet, to protect ourselves, we must have no rights.
In the United States, the American people have no rights.
In our parliaments, we are controlled by the military, which controls the government, which controls the people.

Vietnam

In the Vietnamese people, we have a people who are not free.
We have a people who are not free because they are free.
They are free because they are not free.

We are not free at all — angry about the needless killing and the useless crimes.

I recently received a letter from a friend in Vietnam, which contains these words:

"The high price of freedom.
It is too high.
"We have..."
