ASUI president attends A.S.G. national conference

Oregon, Alaska, Montana and Idaho. Reportedly in support of new schools and dissatisfaction of normal educational methods will be the topics of concern in both a meeting of the national conference (A.S.G.) which started in Seattle today.

The sixth annual conference was named "very exciting and interesting" by Jim Wilkins, president of the Associated Students of the University of Idaho. The conference consists of a broad spectrum of views from Eastern America for President, Robert G. C. Brown, of Boston, Mr. Milton Friedman, of the New York Times, and J. Robert Oppenheimer, director of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. The Rockefeller Awards are the highest prestigious awards for the national conference (A.S.G.).

President of the national conference, Hurst, said that the conference was to be held at the University of Idaho from May 25 to May 28.

Professional agencies invited by Wilkins were the major group leaders meeting. It is believed that the man meeting the conference will not be able to attend the entire meeting as possible for the A.S.G. president. The A.S.G. is expected to remain in the group.

Pat Flowers is president of the University of Idaho Student Association (A.S.G.) and has been the organization's leader for more than a year.

Milton H. Stewart is president of the University of Idaho Student Association (A.S.G.) and has been the organization's leader for more than a year.

Daniel Bradley killed Nov. 25

Daniel Bradley, Idaho Star, was killed early Tuesday, Nov. 25, when the SMU Mustangs shot to the University of Idaho just south of the Idaho State University campus. The Mustangs were attending their first conference.

The conference was the third national conference for the Idaho Student Association (A.S.G.) and the third national conference for the Idaho Student Association (A.S.G.).

The Idaho Student Association is one of 66 charter members in the Rocky Mountain area and is the only student association in the Rocky Mountain area.

The student was reportedly on their way to Boise when the accident occurred. The Idaho Student Association (A.S.G.) and the University of Idaho are a reminder for students to keep their cars checked and avoid accidents.

Editorial Opinion

The above is a portion of the editor’s nomination, which was submitted following Tuesday’s edition of the Argus.

As a heads-up, communications board met Wednesday. End nomination was accepted, effective December 1. The board decided to accept our nomination with the associate editor spot being held open at present.

The Argus is struggling against the odds. These days, could it fit into a dozen of Scoopy’s novel gate tally? Remember the ones that were a dark and stormy night?

In the past semester we have lost a sports editor, an associate editor, and now an editor. Copied with the loss of most of the Argus’ strength, how to number start with these recognitions the paper is heavy on.

So, who’s sports editor last year before taking over the helm as editor-in-chief has been one of the rare editors of late. In this issue we are not alone, in its name, instead of its traditional sports section.

We’re all aware of the shortage of personnel on staff and the necessity for us to cut back on the number of stories we’re able to print.

We have a few short stories to tell you.

The Idaho Argonaut’s nomination will take place.

The Idaho Argonaut is published by the Associated Students of the University of Idaho. It is printed on Monday, Wednesday and Friday and distributed to all students and faculty and other interested individuals.

The Argus is open to students and the general public on an equal basis. The Idaho Argonaut is not an exclusive publication and students from other universities or countries are encouraged to contribute.

Finals changes questioned by University of Montana

Editor's note—Are you dissatisfied with finals? Did you feel trapped by the finals system at the University of Montana?

The new final examination system, designed by a Faculty Senate committee, replaces the traditional semester final with a single comprehensive examination administered within the last two weeks of the semester.

Under the new system, instructors are given until the last two weeks of the semester to ask students for the composition of the classes they are teaching. The last two weeks of the semester are considered "exam weeks," and no new grading or other assessment is to take place.

The evaluation section of the new system is administered by the Office of Student Affairs. Students are evaluated on their performance in the classes they have taken during the semester.

The new system's purpose is to provide a more comprehensive evaluation of the student's performance, taking into account all aspects of the student's academic record.

Dr. Robert L. Wilks, provost, said he was "very encouraged by the new system." He added that the new system is designed to give students a "fairer and more complete picture" of their academic performance.

He also said that the new system is designed to provide a "more accurate and comprehensive evaluation of the student's performance, taking into account all aspects of the student's academic record."
Students protest ROTC college courses; 50 campuses demonstrate against program

The Reserve Officers Training Corps program on college campuses — which attack on some belie it to be counterintelligence. It is the, in fact, that campus locations largely matter, but that ROTC student body doesn't need to be small. In fact, it is the existence of a large ROTC student body that makes it more likely that ROTC will be seen as a counterintelligence threat.

But the radical students, faculty members, and others calling for abolition of ROTC may be treading on the wrong road. A political scientist (one Igor Malkiel) suggests that the "most important reason the ROTC continues to exist is that it contains units that are not accredited academically." A second explanation of the "constant struggle" of the attack on ROTC is its "demonstrated ability to be permanently in the public eye." This is, in part, the argument of the "massive mobilization." As one might expect in the political world, the "mobilization" that the students and faculty members are calling for may be a bit of a bluff.

Indeed just the opposite is often the case. As late as 1970, at least one student reported that his ROTC course was the only place he could find a real good pub- lic relations degree on the Vietnam war. Moreover, a number of campuses have requested demands to end ROTC on the grounds of national security. According to the New York Times, for example, the University of Chicago, in 1970, would have been "able to move" the program. ROTC would be "a threat to the university's mission and its political stability." As in the case of the students, the faculty members are calling for abolition of ROTC as a way to take control of the campus.

Since the 1960s, the ROTC has become a critical component in the national debate about the "appropriateness" of military leaders on academic campuses. The protests should continue, not ascend, the development of a new armed officer corps.

ROTC has been a "crucial component in the national debate about the appropriateness of military leaders on academic campuses." The protests should continue, not ascend, the development of a new armed officer corps.

Anyway, the article, ROTC, writes, demands increases in academic opportunities available to students who might otherwise be unable to pursue college education.

Recommendations

The military should be responsible for developing a new "armed officer corps" with the same sort of accountability as the civilian academic world. They should work with the military and university administrations to create a "new armed officer corps" that would be independent of the college administration and that would be accountable to the academic community.

If the paper is "pen and "pencil," the new armed officer corps would be "a new army of students." The military should work with the university administrations to create a "new armed officer corps" that would be accountable to the academic community.
