Final drawings now in progress for new complex

All architectural drawings are now in progress on the new athletic complex which will be located on the Idaho campus. The facility will include a new 3,000-seat stadium, a new 8,000-square-foot training building, a new 50,000-square-foot indoor practice facility, and a new 20,000-square-foot auxiliary gymnasium.

The project is expected to be completed by the fall of 1970 at a cost of $8 million. The stadium will have seating for 8,000 spectators and will be used primarily for football and soccer games.

Governor praises officials, breaks ground for new complex

Idaho Governor Don Samuels, before addressing the large crowd gathered at the Power Plant for the groundbreaking ceremony on Wednesday, praised the efforts of the State Board of Education for their efforts toward the construction of the new athletic complex.

"Samuelson emphasized in his speech the importance of the new athletic complex and its significance to the future of our state," Governor Samuels said.

The Idaho State Board of Education announced Wednesday that the $8 million athletic complex would be constructed in the next three years.

The Board of Education has also established a new committee to oversee the construction of the new athletic complex. The committee will be headed by Governor Samuels and will be responsible for the overall management and operation of the athletic complex.

Evaluation of plans by faculty scheduled as annual procedure

The Idaho State Board of Education has announced that an annual evaluation of the academic programs and faculty will be conducted to ensure that the university is meeting its goals.

According to Dr. Robert Robson, assistant dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, the evaluation will be conducted each year and will include a review of the academic programs, faculty, and administrative staff.

"We believe that it is essential to have an annual evaluation of our academic programs and faculty to ensure that we are meeting the needs of our students," Dr. Robson said.

The evaluation will be conducted by a team of faculty members who will be selected each year. The team will be responsible for reviewing the academic programs and faculty and providing feedback to the administration.

Computers help check for draftable enrollees

If you didn't file a selective service form when you were in school, you may not be eligible to vote in the Idaho presidential primary, but you may still want to file one. The Selective Service System is responsible for maintaining a record of all men who are eligible to vote.

"If you have not filed a selective service form, you may not be eligible to vote," Selective Service System spokesman Jim Frizier said.

The system is required by law to maintain a record of all men who are eligible to vote, and the system is not required to maintain a record of all men who are not eligible to vote.

Drug remarks covered by news over-shadow theme, says Robson

Idaho Attorney General Robert Robinson told an audience of about 300 at the University of Idaho's School of Business Administration last Wednesday, that drug use at Idaho State University is "completely unknown and unremarkable to the people of Idaho.

"It is my understanding that drug use is not a problem at Idaho State, but we cannot ignore the possibility that drug use may be occurring," Robson said.

Robson also said that the drugs of the future will be "in the hands of everyone," but he said that he does not favor using drugs because they can be harmful to society and the economy.

"I was trying to tell Boise citizens to become more interested in their city and to be more involved in city activities," Robson said.

GUEST COLUMN

Unfortunately, Joe was found guilty of murdering the beloved Idaho Sen. Mike Crapo, and, like the character in the murder mystery novel, ``The Case of the Missing Senator,'' they were found dead together in the Idaho State Senate and House of Representatives later that day. Joe was later sentenced to death by hanging, but in Idaho, they keep him on death row for the rest of his life. Joe was later executed by lethal injection at the Idaho State Penitentiary in Boise.

It's my country too

daytime, driving my car through the beautiful countryside near Portland, I started to think about the importance of preserving our natural resources. It's easy to take for granted the beauty of our forests, rivers, and mountains, but it's important to remember that we are all stewards of the environment.

I began to wonder about the impact of our actions on the environment. Are we really doing our part to protect our planet for future generations? I think we should be more mindful of our consumption and waste, and try to live a more sustainable lifestyle.

The goal of this column is to encourage all of us to take responsibility for the health of our environment. Let's work together to ensure that our children and grandchildren will continue to enjoy the beauty of our natural world.

Sincerely,

Dr. Cherrington honored by friends

Dr. A. MRS. A. CHERRINGTON were honored by members of the faculty and friends Tuesday night at the University of Idaho's Department of Botany, at its retirement banquet. The occasion was the retirement of Dr. A. Elbert Cherrington, who has served as professor of botany and head of the Department of Botany. He has been a member of the University of Idaho faculty for 45 years.

Dr. Cherrington, a physician, was born in the state of Oregon. He is a graduate of Oregon State College, where he received his bachelor's degree in 1927. He then went on to obtain his master's and doctoral degrees in botany from the University of California. In 1930, he was appointed as a member of the University of Idaho faculty and has been there ever since.

During his career, Dr. Cherrington has made significant contributions to the field of botany. He has published numerous articles and books on the subject, and his work has been widely cited by other researchers. He has also been a mentor to many students, and many of them have gone on to successful careers in the field.

In addition to his academic contributions, Dr. Cherrington has also been active in the community. He has served on numerous committees and boards, and has been involved in many community service projects.

The banquet was held in the University of Idaho's Alumni Center, where Dr. Cherrington was presented with a plaque and a certificate of appreciation. The event was attended by colleagues, students, and friends, all of whom expressed their gratitude for Dr. Cherrington's contributions to the University of Idaho and the field of botany.

The event was a success, and everyone present enjoyed the food and company. The University of Idaho is grateful to Dr. Cherrington for his many years of service and wishes him all the best in his retirement.
Idaho Vandals Hope To Avenge Earlier Loss To Mighty Cougars

by Mark Cooper

When Washington State University's basketball team takes to the floor tonight at 7:30, it will be looking for its first win of the season in Pullman. The Cougars defeated the Vandals in Moscow last week, 74-63. The Cougars, who are led by 6-foot-5-inch guard Darrick Gordon, have a 1-2 record.

The game at the Kibbie Dome in this early season contest begins a string of five straight home games for Idaho. The Vandals are far too young to compete with older, more experienced teams like Washington State. However, they have shown flashes of what they can become in the future.

The Vandals, who are led by 6-foot-6-inch forward Steve Kanthou, have a 1-2 record as well. They have shown some promise in their games but are still a work in progress.

The game will be a showcase of two teams with different styles of play. Idaho likes to run a fast-paced offense, while Washington State prefers a more deliberate approach.

For fans of both teams, this game promises to be an exciting one. Expect a close contest as both teams battle for the upper hand.
Fraternities changing as society

by Rick Smith

Fraternities throughout the nation, as well as on the U of I campus, are definitely undergoing a change, according to J. Lance Parker, IFC adviser.

"There is a general trend toward the realization that society is changing," said Parker. Fraternities are more concerned with today's important social issues, such as the Vietnam conflict, the nuclear arms race, pollution, etc.

"Fraternities in the incoming student know that they are concerned with these issues," Parker said.

Moscow Chamber of Commerce opposes change in time zone

The Moscow Chamber of Commerce recently announced that it opposes any change from the present Pacific Standard Time to Daylight Time. This position was taken in response to a letter introduced by the Boise Advertiser and Idaho Chamber of Commerce which would place all of Idaho in the Mountain Standard Time zone, without summer Daylight Time.

Lamp, president of the Moscow Chamber of Commerce, cited Moscow's economic ties with Seattle, Portland, Spokane, and Pullman in his opposition.

Dance planned Feb. 7 by wives of WSU

Mechanical Engineering Women's Club at Washington State University has invited all married members, 18 or older, and all faculty and staff to a dance at the Moore Lecture Hall, 7 P.M. to 11 P.M., Feb. 7. Tickets will cost $1.50 a couple. The price includes two complimentary drinks.

Music will be provided by the Martin Quartet, a Seattle quartet of five students at the University of Washington.

A full buffet will be served after evening. Tickets are available at the IFC.

The fact that fraternities are "glittery groups" points up the main reason why they have a better admission rate to the University of Idaho than any other group. "This is a result of the group's social organization, and it benefits them in every way," Parker remarked.

The definition of a fraternity group is based on the social organization, and it is a clear-cut example of the "τρύακα, which means "the third.""

Moscow Police Chief calls rumors all false

"Since this case began, and especially in recent days, there have been numerous, rumors in town that we have heard the rumors. Recently these rumors have been more prevalent, and they are totally false," Holmes said.

Holmes, an 18-year-old freshman at the University of Idaho was found dead in a Rexroth Cafe the morning of Dec. 30. She had been killed by several blows to the head with a padded instrument.

Holmes was a Moscow resident and was in the vicinity of the Tip Top Cafe the evening of the murder in order to have his evening meal."
