A Time For Burning

Panelists discuss student unrest

By Frank Cudahy
Argonaut Staff Writer

"A Time For Burning"! the University of Idaho newspaper declared in its masthead. The Argonaut turned into a "newspaper of ideas" for a week in the fall of 1974, with the publication of the student Bill of Rights. The event was the brainchild of Robert Robson, and ASUI's Bill of Rights movement was one of the most significant events in the student left's history.

The panelists, including Cindy Hurst, Brad Blocker, and David Mathis, debated the pros and cons of the Bill of Rights, with particular emphasis on the rights of students, faculty, and the community. The discussion was heated, with arguments on both sides of the issue.

The Bill of Rights was a groundbreaking document that aimed to protect the rights of students at the university. It included provisions for free speech, freedom of association, and the right to a fair trial.

The debate was not without its issues. Some faculty members were concerned about the potential for student chaos and disruption. Others argued that the Bill of Rights was necessary to protect the rights of students and to ensure a fair and just university environment.

Ultimately, the Bill of Rights was adopted by the Student Senate on November 9, 1974. It was a significant victory for the student movement and a testament to the power of student organizing.

Racism Workshop Held at WSU

By Mike Bick
Argonaut Staff Writer

In excess of 800 students, faculty, and administrators attended the two-day workshop held in Pullman being called "mysteries." The Washington State University "Racism Workshop" held Wednesday and Thursday at the Pullman Gymnasium, shocked and mystified many. But that, according to Dr. John B. Robinson, president of WSU, was the purpose of the workshop. The two-day event was designed to educate WSU students and faculty on the issue of race and to encourage dialogue and understanding.

The workshop was one of the largest ever held at WSU, with a record number of participants. According to Robinson, the workshop was successful in achieving its goals.

"We had a very large turnout," said Robinson. "We wanted to provide a platform for faculty, students, and community members to discuss the issues of race and racism and to find ways to move forward." Robinson said that the workshop was a step in the right direction for the university.

The workshop featured a variety of speakers, including Dr. Jerry A. Dobson, a professor of psychology at WSU, who spoke on the topic of race and its impact on society.

Dobson said that race is a social construct, created by society, and that it is important to understand how race affects individuals and society as a whole.

"Race is not a naturally occurring phenomenon," said Dobson. "It is a social construct, created by society to define and differentiate people." Dobson said that understanding race is crucial to creating a more inclusive and equitable society.

Following Dobson's speech, Dr. Robert Cooper, a professor of sociology at WSU, spoke on the role of race and racism in society. Cooper said that the workshop was an important step in the right direction.

Cooper said that the workshop was an important step in the right direction.

"It is important to have these conversations," said Cooper. "We need to understand the impact of race and racism on our society and to work towards creating a more inclusive and equitable society." Cooper said that the workshop was a great success and that it was an important step in the right direction.

"I think the workshop was a great success," said Cooper. "We need to continue these conversations and work towards creating a more inclusive and equitable society." Cooper said that the workshop was a great success and that it was an important step in the right direction.

Governor writes off student vote after poll

By Bobbi Russell

This morning, October 15th, a Columbia Day Day rally was held at the State Capitol in Boise. The rally was held to protest the proposed ballot initiative which would allow students, not landlords, to pay all fees. The rally was organized by the Student Government Association and the Idaho Student Labor Alliance.

A study of our second desk

by Bobbi Russell

At the start of the academic year, my wife, my son and I decided that we were going to try a different office schedule. We were all tired of the usual routine, and we decided to try something new. Our office was a small, three-person office, and we all had different schedules.

We decided to try a new system, where each of us would work for three days, then have two days off. This way, we could all have some time off and still keep our office open.

The new system worked well, and we all agreed that it was a better way to work.

Nixon's proposal two-faced

Editor the argument:

President Nixon, in a nationally broadcast speech, today proposed a new economic program designed to reduce inflation and increase job opportunities.

However, some economists have criticized the proposal, saying it would do more harm than good.

Diplomatic flexibility should mean not dividing the world into friendly and unfriendly nations, as we have in the past, but recognizing that every country has its own interests and needs. We should work to find ways to resolve disputes and differences, and not seek to isolate or isolate nations.

Supports ‘kill’yll

Editor the argument:

The ‘kill’yll argument has been one of the most controversial during the campaign season. Many people have been opposed to it, but I believe it is necessary for the future of our country.

This argument was first introduced by Sen. Walter Mondale, a Democrat from Minnesota, during the 1984 presidential campaign.

The argument is based on the idea that we should not be afraid to use military force if necessary to protect our country. It was a very effective argument, and it helped Mondale win the election.

However, some people have criticized the argument, saying that it is too aggressive and that it could lead to unnecessary wars. I believe that the argument was necessary, and that it helped us protect our country.

I urge all of us to support the ‘kill’yll argument, and to work towards a future where we can use it to protect our country.

Rodeo club has meeting elects officers for year

Interest in rodeo is up in all that’s required to be joining the University of Idaho Rodeo Club, according to Frank Blevins, the club’s president.

Blevins, a freshman from Eureka, Idaho, said the club has received a lot of interest from students who enjoy the sport of rodeo.

"We’re trying to get as many people to join as we can," he said. "And we’re trying to make it a fun and enjoyable experience for everyone who’s interested in the sport."
