School starts 3 weeks earlier next fall; calendar approved

The additional time will allow the University to better prepare for registration and issuance of grades prior to the start of the fall semester.

This month marks the first year many faculty members teaching at EWU have been invited to meet with the entire student body. The majority of those students who voted said they believed the calendar with five extended breaks, plus a winter break of five to six weeks, would be a more realistic alternative to the 21-week calendar. Those who voted for the 21-week calendar said they would like a more realistic, protracted fall semester.

Proposed housing code tabled by City Council

Sections of the proposed Moscow housing code that was defeated at its first reading last week were later included in the code that was approved at its second reading, which was passed in mid-November. Some of the housing code sections that were defeated at the first reading included: Section 10-2-102, which defines a "serious violation" of the code; Section 10-2-104, which allows the city to fine landlords for violations; and Section 10-2-106, which allows the city to order a property owner to make repairs or improvements to their property within a specified time frame.

Institute slated on court reform

The Idaho State Bar Committee on Continuing Legal Education is recommending that the state legislature establish a new, centralized location for delivering continuing legal education courses. The committee, which was appointed by the Idaho State Bar, met last week in Boise to discuss potential locations for the new center.

543 pints donated in Blood Drive

A total of 543 pints were donated in the fall blood drive this year. This is a record high for the drive by over 100 pints.

The Red Cross said that the increase was due to several factors, including increased public awareness of the need for blood donations, the use of social media to promote the drive, and the successful organization of the event by the local blood drive committee.

Andrus has confidence in youth

The early 1970s may come to be known as the new era of youth. Dr. Andrus, Idaho's young governor, is the first to claim this title. Andrus has signed a law that will ease the path for those who wish to enter the world of work. The law, which he signed on Monday, will allow young people to work without the usual restrictions that exist in the state. Andrus is confident that this new law will provide a much-needed opportunity for young people.

Re-evaluation of visitation program needed

Major revision of the existing program for more visitation by members of the opposite sex is needed. This is a problem that all college students need to face. Andrus is currently revising the program, and he has requested the cooperation of the students in the revision.

U of I students have little success protesting faculty hiring practice

The policy of hiring faculty members is being questioned by many students at the University of Iowa. They are concerned about the process and feel that it is not transparent. The university has been criticized for not involving students in the decision-making process. The students want to be more involved and feel that their views are not being heard.

New governor's plan out of Mother Goose

Governor Cecil Andrus has revised his plan to outdo the old governor in terms of leadership and experience. Andrus is a new governor who is ready to lead the state into a new era. He has promised to work hard and make the state a better place.

Pay initiative termed valid law

A pay plan, which is valid law, has been set in place by the state legislature. The plan will allow state employees to receive a raise. The legislature has been working on this plan for several years and it is finally being implemented.

Desecration law taken to court

Armitage's flag desecration law was challenged in court by two groups: the American Civil Liberties Union and the National Organization for Women. The case was brought to the U.S. District Court in Arkansas and a federal judge has ruled that the law is unconstitutional. The judge ruled that the law violated the First Amendment, which protects the right to free speech.

Block KOOI's Navy show

By Bruce Leary

Have you ever gotten a Distinguished Service Medal for saving a man's life? Not me. I don't know anyone who has, but I just may if I continue on my way of doing things. For instance, I once saved a man's life by pulling him out of a burning building.

Thursday, KOOI will allow the war stories to be told for all to hear. KOOI is the only radio station in the state that provides this kind of programming.

The Navy's Space Station

Carleton D. Kerr, best known as the man who led the project that produced the first atomic bomb, has just been named the new head of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

The Navy has been working on the space station for several years and it is finally being implemented. The station will be orbiting the Earth and will be used for a variety of purposes.

Idaho National Guard alters civil disturbance procedures

By SNELL

If you receive a call from the Idaho National Guard on Saturday, do not assume that you are about to be arrested.

Harold McFarland, a spokesman for the Idaho National Guard, said the Guard has changed its procedures for civil disturbances.

"Our main concern is the safety of the individuals involved," McFarland said. "We are no longer the law enforcement agency, but rather a military reserve force."

The new procedures are in place because the Guard has been deployed to monitor civil unrest in the state. The Guard was activated on Saturday due to a series of protests related to the death of George Floyd.

"Our mission is to provide a safe and secure environment for the people of Idaho," McFarland said. "We are working closely with local law enforcement to ensure that the protests stay peaceful."

The Guard has been trained in crowd control and has the authority to use non-lethal means to disperse any large crowds.

"We are not here to cause conflict," McFarland said. "We are here to protect the rights of all individuals."

The Guard is part of the National Guard, which is a joint reserve component of the United States Army and the United States Air Force.

The Idaho National Guard is one of the largest in the country, with over 1,500 members. The Guard has been activated in Idaho for several reasons, including civil disturbances, natural disasters, and military exercises.

"Our goal is to be a force for good in our communities," McFarland said. "We are proud to serve the people of Idaho."
