The Cadets Cheat—So What

It seems to be very much the fashion to jump on the bandwagon and criticize the cadets who were caught cheating at the Air Force Academy.

When they enroll the cadets take a pledge to try to keep their officer training or to make sure that their officers are always ready to be useful in the world. This is a very grave obligation that we must all live up to, and not to permit it to go unchallenged is a great error.

Some people write that this is just a matter of personal integrity and that it will be taken care of by the cadets themselves. But the cadets themselves are not free from blame, and they must take responsibility for their actions.

The system of grades, and value based on grades encourages cheating byizu its very nature of putting the value on the system instead of on the study. Any college student can tell you that grades are not a measure of ability, but an indicator of what they really mean. What really counts is what the student learns, not what he gets on the exam.

So long as the value is on the symbol and not on some other personal value, all kinds of cheating will go on. So long as the importance of cheating is worth it, and less even than that, the cheating will continue.

So long as it is clear for the up-and-coming generation that cheating is all right, and lying, theft, and all kinds of other behavior are all right, and there will always be competition, and the cheating will go on.

So long as the honest person survives, cheating will continue. So why not make cheating as much fun as possible? Why not make it possible to get the best grades, make the best money, and have the best time? Why not make it possible to have all kinds of fun and still be successful?

The system of grades, and value based on grades encourages cheating by its very nature of putting the value on the system instead of on the study. Any college student can tell you that grades are not a measure of ability, but an indicator of what they really mean. What really counts is what the student learns, not what he gets on the exam.

Polish Aren't Flag Wavers—But They're Nationalistic To Heritage

By J. I. SMITH

The Poles aren't flag-waving people. They're very nationalistic to their Polish heritage.

This was the impression of Professor J. I. Smith, who when he travelled abroad for the first time, expected to see the flag waving.

He had been invited to the University of California to lecture in Government, History, and Social Science for the fall term, and while he was there, he also spent a short time in the University of Berlin, Germany.

He found that the Poles were very nationalistic to their Polish heritage, but he did not see much flag waving.

The Poles are very nationalistic to their Polish heritage, and they are very patriotic to their Polish nation.

Is University Provincial Campus? Idaho Called Old Fashioned By Coed

BY VALERIE SMITH

The University Provincial Campus is old fashioned by coed. It is a provincial campus in the sense that it is located in a provincial setting, but it is also old fashioned in the sense that it is a coed campus.

The University Provincial Campus is located in a picturesque setting, surrounded by rolling hills and a serene lake. The campus is known for its historic buildings, which date back to the early 1900s. The campus also offers a variety of outdoor activities, such as hiking and bird watching.

Despite its picturesque setting, the University Provincial Campus is facing a number of challenges. One of the main issues is the lack of diversity on campus. The majority of students are from the local area, and there are few international students.

Another challenge facing the University Provincial Campus is the high cost of tuition. The cost of tuition is higher than at many other universities, which makes it difficult for students to afford to attend.

Despite these challenges, the University Provincial Campus remains a popular destination for students and visitors alike. The campus offers a unique combination of natural beauty and academic rigor, making it a sought-after location for those seeking an education in a picturesque setting.
