Dr. David E. Smith, medical director of the Idaho Student Health Center of the State University of Idaho, said that the drug problem is "only one facet of a much larger problem," which includes the use of tobacco and alcohol by students.

Smith said that the drug problem is significant at the university and that the health center is working with students who have problems with drugs. He also mentioned that the university is conducting research on the effects of drugs on students.

The University of Idaho has established a Drug Abuse Prevention Committee, which is chaired by Dr. James L. Grubbs, the university's director of student health services. The committee is responsible for developing and implementing policies and procedures to address drug abuse on campus.

Domestic Student Exchange sends students to other colleges

Starting next September, the University of Idaho will be able to send students to other institutions in the United States without incurring additional costs.

The program, called the Domestic Student Exchange Program (DSEP), is being offered to students who are interested in studying at other universities. The program will provide students with the opportunity to gain new perspectives and experiences while earning credits.

The University of Idaho will be able to send students to institutions in other states for a fee of $5,000 per semester, which includes tuition and fees.

The program is expected to be popular among students, especially those who want to explore new environments and cultures.

Advantages

- Students will have the opportunity to study at other institutions and gain new perspectives.
- The program will provide students with the opportunity to earn credits while studying at other institutions.
- Students will have the opportunity to gain new experiences and learn about different cultures.

Disadvantages

- The program may be limited to a small number of students.
- Students may have to pay additional fees for the program.

Under the program, students will be able to take courses at other institutions, which will be transferred to the University of Idaho.

All courses that are taken as part of the Domestic Student Exchange Program will be counted toward the student's degree requirements.

The program is expected to be popular among students, especially those who want to explore new environments and cultures.

Gov. Andrus tells State of State parents to telephone his office

Gov. Norman E. J. Andrus has called on parents to telephone his office to discuss the recent increase in tuition at state colleges.

"I urge all parents to contact my office to express their concerns," Andrus said. "I want to hear your opinions and concerns about this issue."
