Use of space to be re-evaluated

By Flat Slogan

Students and faculty at the University of Idaho have many contentious issues that are crowding or muddying their airwaves. It seems that every day the University of Idaho, the Idaho State Board of Education, the Federal Council of Board and Fiscal Committee, the University of Idaho, and the Idaho legislature are making decisions that are impacting our campus space, none of which seems to be a deliberate plan and should be replaced.

Kevin A. Deilcke, Legislative Editor, after consulting with Flat Slogan, has agreed to make a new survey on campus that will end in the Fall to sort out the truth.

Agreed upon with

The campus planning director, Dave Klemmer, agreed with Flat Slogan and said the committee has created the report on the University of Idaho, the Idaho State Board of Education, the Federal Council of Board and Fiscal Committee, the University of Idaho, and the Idaho legislature are making decisions that are impacting our campus space, none of which seems to be a deliberate plan and should be replaced.

Due to differences, according to Klemmer, that all chairs in all classrooms should be over 30 per cent and that such rooms could be 30 per cent of each such room’s, “It’s a ridiculous claim to make that the chairs must be maximum utilizations,” said Flat Slogan.

John O’Donohue, who is acting as an advisor to the University of Idaho, the Idaho State Board of Education, the Federal Council of Board and Fiscal Committee, the University of Idaho, and the Idaho legislature are making decisions that are impacting our campus space, none of which seems to be a deliberate plan and should be replaced, but they don’t see what they want it to be. This is a separate problem, they tell what action they want it to be. “We decided to refer it to the President’s office,” said John O’Donohue.

Over the next five years Hallett estimates less than $4 billion will be needed to improve parking, lighting, and security, all of which are required to maintain maximum utilization of all buildings.

“If we can’t hear them down until they havepermission and to those,” said Hallett. “Consequently the building of new facilities will be done in close proximity of the old ones and as teaching or as being during building.

YAF, Argonaut controversy

The controversy between the Young Americans for Freedom and the Argonaut Daily is ongoing. The university has been divided over the issues, and there is a lack of communication between the two groups.

Faculty discusses parking fees, say needed for lot improvements

The faculty discussed parking fees, headlined "Parking fee vote passed," in their Tuesday meeting.

The faculty members noted the report of the administration on parking, which recommended increasing the fees for students, faculty and non-paying visitors. The faculty members also noted the increase in parking fees was necessary to finance temporary improvements necessary on campus.

The faculty raised concerns concerning the matter's implementation was appropriate. Those opposed to the fees, however, thought the fees should not be encouraged or exempted and should be able to find space if they wanted it.

The fees are for three years, according to the schedule. The fees are for three years, according to the schedule.

Parking lots. Why spend all that money if you can’t find parking lot space? Dr. Steven Carter, financial vice president, has been charged with being made within the university. It’s not hard to see that Carter has been making decisions that are impacting our campus space. So, what do you think about the plan? Everyone had been impaired in the plans for the new buildings, but no one had been impaired in the plans for the new buildings. The plans for the new buildings were not considered.

By Flat Slogan

"Our long range goals should be formulated in a comprehensive manner, given the campus space," replied Dr. Carter. "The campus is the center of the campus, not the parking lots. It is not necessary to develop parking lots that are not in use." Faculty members noted the lack of parking lots was because the campus space is not used. "I don’t see the possibility that the number of cars per capita will be less than the parking space," said Dr. Carter. "The campus is not the center of parking, it’s the center of the campus. It’s not necessary to develop parking lots that are not in use." Faculty members noted the lack of parking lots was because the campus space is not used. Some stadium seats will be sold at "reserved price"

By Dave Klemmer

By a consensus vote, senators agreed Tuesday in the athletic department, student and student workers in the Idaho football games as reserved seats for the first five games of the season. According to athletic department representatives, up to 2,000 seats in wrist bands to at least 12,000 and 1,000 seats will be left. These seats will be at those who have been designated as student and general admission sections.

New cost of stamps causes vending machine adjustments

Vending machines and the self-service postal unit at the University Station are being adjusted to dispense the new stamps required under the new postal rate system. According to Postmaster General Paul L. Hartung, the new rate for the first-class stamp will be 40 cents and the second-class stamp will be 78 cents.

The new rate has been put into effect, said the Postmaster General, and the rate for the first-class stamp will be 40 cents and the second-class stamp will be 78 cents.

According to the new rate, the price of the first-class stamp will be 40 cents. The air mail stamp will be 60 cents. The first-class and 10 cent air mail stamps will be discontinued.

In addition to 4c and 7c cents, many vending machines will dispersed 1 cent change.

Merritt's postmaster, Postmaster General, said there will be no noticeable changes in the machines.

Customers should go to windows for stamp purchases in these cases, he said.

The Palestinians have been much talked about since the Israeli-Palestinian conflict began. Among the people who claimed the area between the Jordan Valley and the Mediterranean Sea, since 1967, became the focus from which they establish the State of Israel.

According to archeologists, the Palestinians have lived there for at least 9,000 years in the Western Corps of the Palestinians. About 200 years before the time of the Arab Conquest of Palestine, they were the descendants of various ethnic groups which occupied a market place of settlement, industry, and trade. In the seventh century A.D. the Battle of the Israelis and the Battle of the Arabs stopped, the people have been renamed the Palestinians. From the Seventh Century A.D. the Arabs have been the predominant population of the area.

The Israeli-Palestinian conflict has continued from a political, military, and social point of view. Political conflict between the two peoples is at the root of the conflict. Israel has occupied the Palestinian territories since 1967 and has imposed a military government on them. The Palestinians have not been able to exercise their political rights, and their suffering is on a large scale.

The Arab world has consistently condemned the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. The Arab League has condemned Israel's actions and has called for a cessation of hostilities. The United Nations Security Council has repeatedly condemned Israeli actions and has called for a solution to the conflict.

The conflict has been a major concern of the international community. The United Nations has taken a leading role in seeking a peaceful resolution to the conflict. The United States has been a key player in the negotiations process, and has been involved in efforts to reach a peace agreement.

The conflict has had a profound impact on the lives of the people involved. The Palestinian people have suffered extensively, with widespread poverty, unemployment, and displacement. The Israeli people have also been affected, with economic costs, social tension, and political divisions.

The conflict has been a source of frustration and despair for many people. It has also been a source of hope, as many people continue to work towards a peaceful resolution. The challenges of the conflict are great, but the commitment to finding a peaceful solution is even greater.

Friendly home-town paper attacks Argonaut

I picked up my friendly home-town weekly paper, the Idaho County Free Press, yesterday morning and was not too surprised to encounter an attack on my university newspaper, The Argonaut. This one however, held a little extra surprise.

The attack on the Free Press can come across as a warning to those who may be interested in freedom of the press and free expression, not supporting supply for the Free Press.

The same criticism can be applied to those at Grenawle High School, where the IHS paper is called the Argonaut. They may argue that they have the right to "publish a more popular" paper without the support of the students.

In my opinion, the Argonaut is a great newspaper. It is the only newspaper in Idaho that covers the entire state, and it does so in a very professional manner. The staff works hard to provide accurate, timely, and relevant news to the students.

I find it frustrating that the IHS administration would try to censor the IHS paper. The IHS administration should support the IHS paper, not attempt to control it.

I hope that the IHS administration will respect the freedom of the press and free expression. I also hope that the students will continue to support the Argonaut and the IHS paper.
Black and White get together!

Before,

1. In the last few years we have become acutely aware of the problems of racial and ethnic discrimination. These problems are real and we continue to seek ways to make up for past wrongs and injustices.
2. The black and white student communities must continue to make the attempt to correct all past injustices by creating an atmosphere wherein the doors of opportunity are open to all students, through the support and coordination of interests.

Challenge

To the students at the university, the challenge is obvious. We all agree that a great challenge and opportunity is available. The challenge is opening up this school to minority groups on a much larger basis. The opportunity arises now in the benefit to both the black and white student community.

The benefits that the black individual and the black community receive are numerous and far reaching. In the past we have denied these people any real opportunity for education and we have made the effort to have tried to close these opportunities even further. Now the black student must continue to reach the institutions.

But what is more important to the white student and to this community, is the possible educational values of recruiting more minority students. If this school is to be a national as well as a local institution, there must be a more diversified student body.

Black"sells"dandelions.

In the world today, the dandelion is not merely a "weed." The dandelion, a flower that once was considered a pest, is now being sold as a valuable commodity.

During.

How kill dandelions?

Beginning every spring thousands of middle-class Americans don shiny hats and tennis gloves to attack with merciless vigor an intruder which threatens their virgin lawns. The dandelion, a dime figure of a weed with a saucy golden cap, is the victim of numerous plans and battle campaigns. Many of these strategies fail, some succeed and all are renewed annually with even more energy.

The University of Idaho, that great center of modern technology, uses a highly successful weapon known as S.A.O. in its war against the dandelion. But why, kill dandelions in the first place? They aren't 'ruthless. They don't pollute the atmosphere as much as cars. They don't even talk back.

Dandelions do make good flower frames for little girls. They are alive and their beauty has inspired poets.

So why kill dandelions? Why not devote these dandelion-killing energies to an anti-litter pick up or something equally as useful?

Art show winners announced

"Bahk's Book," a painting in acrylic by University of Idaho graduate student Leo Stanley, won the low in show award of $15 of the annual Student Art Association Fair and Festival competition. "At Home" by Debra Lynn Stender, also for a painting in acrylic, was the high in show award of $25. Students from the university submitted 186 entries in the festival, held for the first time in downtown Moscow.

Setting up booths at 4th St. and Main in Moscow's city center, several students and their art works which demonstrated painting as well as potting and jewelry making, showcased their wares at the art show.

Persephone, a ballet presented

An original ballet adapted from the Greek myth Persephone and Dionysus will be presented by the Moscow Dance Theatre on May 15 at 8 p.m. in the Ad Astra Auditorium.

Persephone, adapted and choreographed by John Allen and Linda BroRuss, is based on the Greek myth of Persephone and Dionysus, who are depicted by the god Hades to his underworld kingdom. The story of the gods' search for their daughter is told in the ballet, a work of art that uses only the music of the Moscow Dance Theatre, director, John Allen and Linda BroRuss.

The ballet is performed in the Ad Astra Auditorium at 8:00 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday evenings.

Environment Symposium

A public awareness environmental symposium will be presented in the Ad Astra Auditorium on Saturday, May 15, by the Environmental Interests Steering Committee. The symposium is designed to bring community interest and individual action in environmental problems.

The symposium will feature various environmental experts who will discuss various topics related to environmental issues.

The symposium is free and open to the public. No registration is required.

The 1971 compact

You won't be seeing on our streets.

It started out as a 1963 discovery — "a sign for sale" — but by 1971 it is just as popular, driven at a city street, it is on display at the window of the car. The compact is the machine of the future.

The compact is a car that is not only small, but also more fuel efficient. It is designed to be more environmentally friendly and to reduce traffic congestion.

Free music for free money

The Moscow area is being blessed today with the presence of the Dr. Averett and Barbara Nelson, Baronne Hotel in Moscow.

The group, whose music is "free", is based out of Seattle and has been touring since the winter months. They will be playing outside the city, and will be able to see the show for free.

According to Dr. Averett, their music consists of soul and jazz music, and they have been performing in clubs and bars around the state.

They will be in the area for several concerts, as they begin their tour of the state.
