Bitter feelings, mistaken impressions and a power struggle over the Student Union Building budget all have boiled beneath the surface in a tense struggle on this campus for the last two weeks.

So far, the ASU senate is the apparent victor. That legislative body passed a resolution Oct. 15 saying that the senate would henceforth review the SUB budget. Review of the Student Union budget had previously been handled, in theory, by the SUB board.

The senate felt that there are areas in which student money is spent but that the elected representatives are completely in the dark," said the senate president.

"The senate would rather that elected representatives as well as appointed ones see the budget," he said.

Members of SUB board are appointed by the ASU president with the consent of the senate.

Fitzgerald, a member of the senate finance committee, maintains that the senate has the "right and responsibility" to oversee the Student Union budget because "it's in the regulations."

The senate writes and revises those regulations.

Fierce opposition to the senate's move to oversee the budget was voiced by former ASU senator and former chairman of SUB board, Gene Davis.

"What the senate in essence is doing is setting up the typical ASU committee with people who want to work and who know what they are doing and then having the senate taking all the glory. They're glory hogs. You have people on the senate who don't know what they're doing."

When Davis was chairman of the SUB board, the budget was not submitted to the senate for approval.

"The way we got around it was we just told the senate to go to hell," Davis said.

He said the senate's legislation would force SUB board to "hit and run" tactics. "You'd do something and then have to not tell anyone about it," Davis complained.

The actual budget for the Student Union is prepared "primarily by me," said Dean Vettrus, general manager of the SUB and ASU.

From Vettrus the budget goes to SUB board where it is reviewed.

"Well, the budget submitted to our board generally go through without too many questions because students have to realize that they're amateurs," said the present chairman of SUB board, Joe Corlett.

"It is professionally done. We would have a say if they were going to put offices in the cafeteria but generally the budgets are submitted to us and we say okay and then they go to the regents."

"I think if you wanted the SUB run by students it wouldn't be done as well, personally," Corlett said.

The problem is with individuals and not with the system, according to Rob Russell, another senator and a member of SUB board.

Russell, who agrees with Fitzgerald's statement on right and responsibility of the senate, said that all the senate is doing is "reiterating what is all ready in the regulations."

"But that doesn't mean that much. Pretty soon SUB board will be right back doing what they've done all along and in a month or so the little flurry in the senate will be over and we'll be on something else."

Today is last chance on petition filing for ASUI campaign

Petitions containing 362 endorsements of a senatorial election have been turned into the ASUI offices.

A total of 676 signatures is needed by 5 p.m. today to call a student body vote for the replacement of the senate position vacated by Chris Smith two weeks ago.

If the 676 names cannot be obtained by today, a senate appointment will be made by Mary Ruth Mann, ASUI president.

Anyone interested in the position, if the petition fails, may place their name on a list for consideration by Miss Mann.

A special election for the one opening would cost $150-$200 and come from the ASUI general reserve fund. The senate position will expire next March and Miss Mann feels an election is wasted if there is only one candidate running. Otherwise, she values an election as much as her possible appointive action.

The petitions that have been turned in were collected by Wes Wilbrite, the only candidate who has officially filed. He plans to increase the total number of signatures to 450 by today's deadline.

Other students have shown interest in running for election by taking out petitions for consideration in leaving their names for consideration for appointment.

Students’ attempt fails to get Veterans Day off

School went on as usual on the University of Idaho campus Monday. This was despite the efforts of two Idaho students who felt that there should be some sort of commemoration of Veterans Day each year.

“The basic idea was not to just get out of classes, but to commemorate this national holiday,” Collette Corbin said.

Now planning for Nov. 11

The two tried to get classes dismissed Monday, or to have some sort of program to recognize the day. As this was not possible, they are now trying to plan something for Nov. 11.

“We don’t know what we can arrange for the day,” Linda Cruickshank said. “Possibly we can get classes cancelled that day. We don’t know yet. We are also thinking about having some sort of program at 11 a.m. that day with Tony Park or Gov. Andrus to speak and getting some veterans group to participate.”

The idea originated at lunch Sunday when several students were discussing the fact that Monday was a national holiday but classes were still being held, according to Miss Cruickshank. The fact was also brought up at Boise State College and Idaho State University were not holding classes.

“How could something be done, so we decided to see what might be accomplished,” she said.

Hartung couldn’t do much

The two contacted President Ernest Hartung, who was open to any suggestions, but was not in a position where he could do much at that late date.

Joint concert scheduled

Bach's "Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in F Major" and Hovhaness' "Symphony No. 4, Op. 10" will be the featured works in the joint concert by the University Orchestra and Wind Ensemble at 8 p.m. Thursday, at the University Auditorium.

During the first half of the concert, the Wind Ensemble will perform marches by Sousa, Alford and Goldman as well as the Hovhaness symphony. The orchestra will perform Chabrier's "Espana Rhapsody" in addition to the Bach work during the second half.

The guest soloists for the concerto include Richard Werner, instructor, trumpet; Richard R. Ithn, assistant professor, flute; Robert C. Probasco, assistant professor, oboe; and Bruce L. Farrar, graduate assistant, violin.

Latin mood pervades recital

Gustavo Becerra's Quartet No. 4, which the Philadelphia String Quartet will play at its second Washington State University recital of the season tomorrow night, holds special charm for the performing group.

During a South American tour in 1968, Quartet members met Chilean Becerra in Santiago, and asked if he had any music suitable for their repertoire.

"He gave us a handful of music, and we resurrected Quartet No. 4 for our performance at the Festival of the Americas and Spain in Madrid last year," said violist Irven Eisenberg.

"The music is very typical of South America — strong, exciting, and in the mood of the jungle," Eisenberg said. The quartet recently recorded the work on its own label.

The program, which is scheduled for 8 p.m. in Kimbrough Concert Hall, opens with Mozart's Quartet in E Flat Major, K. 428. This work has also been recorded by the quartet.

work has long been a concert favorite, probably because of the brilliant trumpet part.

The Hovhaness symphony features special use of percussion, including timpani, glockenspiel, chimes and vibraphone. Hovhaness has said of this work, "I admire the giant melody of the Himalyan Mountains, seventh-century Armenian religious music, classical music of South India, orchestra music of Tang Dynasty China around 800 A.D. and opera oratorios of Händel."

The concert, the first this season for each of the performing groups, is open to the public without charge.

Voters from different precincts will vote in different parts of the fire station.

Soviet opportunities, culture discussed

With the compliments of The Information Department of The Soviet Embassy
Washington, D.C.

Velvet, USSR Minister of Higher and Specialized Secondary Education, delivered a report. Let's look at some of the students at the rally. That will give you an idea of what Soviet students are like. Nana Dzhordzhadze, a Georgian, from the Academy of Arts in Tbilisi, says, "We would like to create new architectural forms that would favorably affect the environment in which man lives and works." Recently Nana and two friends designed a complex of hotels, motels and tourist residences. It is known as a "wilderness project" and it earned them "Excellent." The complex will be built.

Shirskova and Kuznetsova, two students from the Leningrad Institute of Technology who have won several awards at the USSR Exhibition of Economic Achievements for their work in obtaining compound concentrated fertilizers from Phosphates, are also attending the rally.

Addressing the students, Academician Mikhail Mikheevich Buturishvili said: "No country has a greater stake in the future than the one where the environment is the most threatened. The wilderness areas of the USSR, with their range of wildlife, are a heritage which must be protected. Every summer students organize field trips and build plantations, houses of culture and the like in villages and towns. It's not easy to join a detachment, only the best are picked. The detachment operates like a commune and is completely self-governing. Last year, 600 complexes valued at 6 million rubles and completed 13,000 projects. Five hundred young people were decorated with orders and medals for their work. Students call their summer work their third term. After all, it gives them organizational skills, experience and an opportunity to travel.

Foreign students are eager to join this movement, too. Last year 1,600 foreign students worked in international building teams. "The work of these teams," Leonid Brezhnev said at the rally, "is further proof that the participation of the student in public life is not a play at independence.

The rally is also being attended by a large group of representatives of a special category of students who enjoy exceptional respect in the Soviet Union those hard-working people with amazing self-discipline who study by correspondence in the evenings without dropping their jobs. Their job, as a rule, corresponds to what they are studying.

Two years ago they have given paid vacations to take exams (40 days all together) and all students got a per cent reduction in travel fares. When its time to take state examinations and defend a diploma project, the paid vacation is four months. The working week of the undergraduate is shortened by one day.

In his speech to the students, Leonid Brezhnev announced that a decision was adopted the other day to improve the material, living and every day conditions of students. The size of scholarships has been raised (an additional 1.5 billion rubles is allocated for this in the current five-year period); and a large number of new dormitories, lecture halls and sports projects will be built. He said that in five years "almost one out of every ten Soviet citizen students will have a diploma or a higher or a specialized secondary educational institution.

Chuck Hay
Wilderness-lovers

(Last week I hinted at some different interpretations of "wilderness.") I think the wilderness concept of the Sierra Club, the Wilderness Society, and William Dunleavy and others who helped get the 1964 Wilderness Bill through congress, are romantic, illogical, and of extremely limited value.

Point number one: a study of the writings of the above named crew reveals that wilderness is the only "spiritually satisfying" experience. And that anything but wilderness (hikes or trail rides) are therefore higher and finer than skiers, hunters, dog-walkers, etc. You can find this assumption in popular books on wilderness. Even in books which are assumed to be incorporated into newsletters. All it means is mobbly, all the more insufferable because concealed.

I've skied and hunted and I've hiked for six summers in the Salmon River Area, and darned if I feel one bit holier when I'm doing one than when I'm doing the other.

Two: that all people in the world need wilderness for peace of mind (translate Graft). Granted all need some contact with the out-of-doors, does it follow that they need to declare that a piece of land with trails and old miner shacks all scattered through it is "wilderness?" And equating God only with undeveloped lands is wrong for two reasons: it keeps the man against nature tension alive by declaring that "undeveloped nature" is superior to man. This is just as fallacious as saying that man is superior to nature.

We need any kind of wilderness we can't drift in and out of a wilderness area without leaving any traces.

Secondly, if God isn't with us where we live, but waits until we accost him in a pack trip into the back country then all of, including God, are in sad shape.

(If you think I exaggerate the religious implications of this, look at some poems and stories printed by the above named groups: Man gets "nope" when he leaves the road — he sees chapels instead of trees, angels instead of snow banks.)

Three: wilderness is confused in completely negative terms — no roads, no permanent buildings, no contact or little influence with man, no civilization. (See the text of the Wilderness Act.) To start with, these ideas are illogical. Trails themselves are permanent improvements, airplanes and helicopters which protect the forest from burning are machines, and the ecology of the so-called wilderness has been vastly affected by miners in the past and by hunters today.

Also, negative terms are no foundation for basing any kind of policy upon: you then become blind to see how much it is possible to work to improve value of a trail area: overnight shelters, extension or introduction of new species of wildlife, bear-proof places to store food, better trail signs, and other ideas brought in the next article. In short, it is impossible to keep man from influencing his environment — the trick is to cooperate with it.

A wilderness experience depends upon solitude (translate: few people; a vast amount of acreage). Again, this assumption has the seeds of selfishness planted within it.

The real value of wilderness is in the area of the entire experience. And we can hope that we may have another wilderness area before the Seven Devils, but such illusions are dangerous to the task at hand. We aren't frontiersmen, and every foot of the Seven Devils has been climbed up.

Four: the worst assumption that I see in wilderness types of writing is that we've wreaked every other type of environment in the country, so the only one left to "save" is wilderness. Not only does this approach slight the ninety per cent of government land which is not wilderness, it slights farms, villages, cities, suburbs, and every location where we do live. If I believe every place in the country has the potential for beauty, long range planning, and expansion of recreational and natural opportunity. Anyone who has been in South Chicago knows how hard the task will be.

Still, it is here. So instead of making a hard decision to spend too much money and time to make Detroit or Dallas a better place to live in, we talk of getting spiritually refreshed in wilderness, the use of which is limited, of course, to upper and middle class families.

If conservation means anything at all, it seems to me it means conserving human potential and human abilities whether human ability is the grizzly bear or the California Condor when the real priceless heritage is the human potential of Seattle, New York, Paris, or Lewiston. If people can't find beauty and peace and meaning in their daily environment, what good is some wilderness five hundred miles away?

Next article I'll talk about some positive approaches we could use within the state of Idaho, with respect to the vast areas of public land within the state.

Dean Reid replies

Your view of my remarks about parking in the Argonaut editorial of 22 October seems to be based on a misunderstanding. As I dislike misunderstandings, perhaps it will be possible to erase this one. We all recognize that communication is a difficult art in which much room for improvement exists. What you heard me say is not what I intended to convey. Not everyone who was there agreed that I said just what your editorial reports me as having said.

For the record, it is my feeling that everyone who is able and who is within reasonable distance of the campus should walk or bicycle, for recreation. The danger of atmospheric pollution by auto exhaust as well as for health. I make no distinctions between faculty, staff, or students in this matter. As a field geologist, stream fisherman, andiker, I do walk and have walked more than almost anyone else.

I was delighted a few years ago when some of my graduate students presented me with a porcelain plaque bearing the likeness of a road runner. Feeling as I do about the delights in walking and the dangers in atmospheric pollution, you will understand why I am worried about the misunderstanding that has arisen. But I am not greatly surprised by it. In the sessions on long-range university planning on the weekend, I had the experience of seeing three completely different interpretations placed on a deceptively simple phrase. This sort of thing is not new to any of us. But it does point to a problem we have.

Clinic needs help

Sirs:

In our psychiatric practice we have treated a number of patients, and I am aware of the history of incest. In many of these cases emotional disturbance did not develop until after the illicit sexual activity was known to the family. This fact has led us to consider the possibility that the psychic trauma was not the result of incest but of improper management.

In an attempt to establish more adequate guidelines we are exploring the pasts of mentally stable persons. Will you and your readers help us? We need anonymous autobiographies from women who are leading happy and rewarding lives in spite of having experienced incest. We will appreciate all information and want to encourage as much detail as possible.

Funds for who?

Editor, the Argonaut:

We feel that a major question which should have been posed in the referendum and put to the student body at large, is practically hidden in the present questionnaire.

Our players and supporters (currently about 500 for home games) believe that as the rules developed and the need for athletic facilities at the University should be met by a support for football and other varsity sports, or whether, in this connection, there is an increase or a decrease in athletic funding, although most of us find a decreasing of such funding, and not business and public relations, and that we are at the University and consider ourselves rather than devote most of our time to athletics.

We strongly argue that the monies appropriated for athletics be divided equally amongst all sports programs at the University and that club sports, like soccer, not have to pay second-string to the varsity sports, especially football.

As students at the University, we see no reason why our own particular sports interest, and those of our fellow students engaged in other club sports should be any less important in terms of funding than other sports activities. We do not desire to become a varsity sport, but in our opinion this should not mean that we receive second-rate financial treatment when it is ourselves and others who feel like us who are footing the bills.

In order to make the above point of view clear on the present referendum, we urge you to: respond to question 6 by asking who that received all the money allowed in the referendum. We wish to know whether we are more evenly distributed between the varsity sports and club sports like soccer.

Please vote on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Dear Editor,

Construction of Lower Granite Dam, widely hailed by business and the utilities industry as a means for slackwater navigation to Lewiston, power generation and recreation continues in spite of strong opposition. The dam's benefits are the costs:

1. Lower construction and operation cost: about $80 per million.
2. Road and railroad relocations — cost in the millions.
3. Annual municipal and industrial treatment plants — are to be built, but will not be completed prior to the reservoir's filling, and the waters will be subject to heavy pollution from industry, the municipalities of Lewiston-Clarkston, and some of the stock feedlots near the Snake River, and entropication will be maximized.
4. Loss to the migratory commercial and sports fisheries industries — already this year, 25 per cent of the missing fish on the Columbia-Snake have died: what will another dam, whose reservoir will include pollution, do to the survival rate?
5. Wildlife and 48 archeological sites — will be destroyed.
6. Also in question is the Northwest's need for more electrical power, especially when advertisements constantly urge us to use more. And, the supposed need for more power is based on population projections which do not reflect the decrease of 15 per cent in the population growth. Further, the great American dream that unchecked economic growth will continue is currently in serious dispute, and it is this axiom that has spearheaded dam construction.

Lower Granite construction continues.

Why? Mr. James Agee, Environmental Protection Agency, 1234 8th Ave. Seattle A 98101, should be urged to investigate this disaster. Let's write him!

Sincerely,

Football mediocrity — unbecoming

To: Editor, the Argonaut

Comments made by ASUI Vice President Tom Slaney in your column prompted a reply concerning the organization and goals of Vandal Boosters.

First of all, Vandal Boosters consists of alumni, boosters, and friends of the University who believe that athletic scholarships to obtain academic advancement should be provided just as endowments and grants furnish money for various colleges in our University. Our funds are not primarily for football, but the entire athletic grant and aid system. Vandal Boosters are normally citizens domiciled in Idaho, paying a sizable income tax and other taxes to support higher education. Obviously, many Boosters have sons and daughters attending the University, and it is not unreasonable to state the parent frequently ends up paying all or most of the $90 per student Mr. Slaney feels is being dumped in athletic programs and particularly football. Through these tax benefits many Vandal Boosters are paying several thousand dollars a year for high education to help the major cost of their sons and daughters education.

We feel that the University of Idaho should provide athletic scholarships in all N-1-A. sports possible, preferably in the university rather than college division. We believe that all of the 86 State Universities need well rounded athletic programs. The foundations of their existence lie in the academic, cultural, social, and athletic being and without any one of these the foundation will decay and the university fall into an aura of mediocrity not becoming to the first university of each state.

We, of course, do strive to raise more than the approximate $40,000 to $50,000 contributed by Vandal Boosters each year; but before Mr. Slaney should minimize this effort, he should be aware that our tax burdens to education are compounded as individuals, and also, he should reflect upon what his future philanthropic outlook will be on the spectrum of all university problems.

Sincerely,

Traffic fines

Money goes to traffic courts

Now when you pay a university traffic fine you're helping send a worthy student through college— as well as paying for traffic costs.

According to Tom Slayton, vice-president of the ASUI, up until this year all the money collected in traffic fines went into the General University Scholarship Fund.

"In a regents meeting last week," Slayton said, "it was passed to give onehalf of the money collected from traffic fines to the traffic courts, the other half remaining in the scholarship fund.

"The General University Scholarships are given out in $100 and $200 scholarships to students who show high scholastic achievement and demonstrate some degree of financial need."

Slayton said that last year $11,900 was collected in traffic fines and put into the General University Fund and given out in $5 scholarships.

An estimated $14,000 is expected to be collected this year, Slayton added.

Of this $14,000, $7,000 will go to pay for traffic courts, cutting the amount towards the General University Scholarship Fund in half, he said.

"We should be doing just the opposite," Slayton said, "I feel that we will lose a lot of bright students if we cut down scholarships which may be the deciding factor of the college they choose."

"No source of money"

Slayton added that he knew of no immediate source of money to make up for the money taken by the traffic court.

When asked if there were any alternative sources of money, Charles Decker, dean of students, said, "No, I don't think there is really."

Decker said that many scholarships are made possible from the interest collected on large donations to the university.

Need $200,000

"But," Decker said, "to get $10,000 for scholarships, we'd need a $200,000 donation with an interest rate of 5 per cent. Where can we get such a large donation?"

Decker said that he felt that it would be easier for the traffic court to get money from other sources such as the state.

Dean Vettrus, general manager of the ASUI and Student Union operator in charge of campus parking, said, "We have a lot of expenses to pay concerning traffic court hearings, clerical work, accounting, parking decals and traffic regulations pamphlets."

"State doesn't give money"

Vettrus said that the state doesn't give money to the traffic court.

"The ASUI can't afford to pick up the tab and all funds come from the Student Union Fund — no funds are appropriated from the state," Vettrus said.

The $7,000 given to the traffic court will be used in the following way, Slayton said:

- $1,000 to printing of parking decals
- $900 to clerical help
- $600 to the printing of traffic regulations pamphlets
- "We need the money to pay these expenses," Vettrus said. "But we also need the money for scholarships — I can see how Mr. Decker feels."

Vettrus said that the attitude of many people on campus is that it is up to the students who drive cars on campus to pay for university traffic costs.

Vandal Homecoming in Texas
tie 1905 winning streak record

It was billed as the West Texas State Bulldingers’ Homecoming. However, Coach Don Robbins and his Vandals took the honors as Robbins returned to the scene of his many high school triumphs and defeated a former high school coaching opponent when the Vandals shutout West Texas 36-9 Saturday.

The Vandals again showed great defense and good scoring thrust as the Idaho team won their fifth game in a row, tying a record set in 1905 when Idaho last won five straight.

They also racked up their second shutout, a feat that has not been accomplished by a Vandals team since 1964 and it is the first time since 1932 that a Vandals head football coach has had a career mark of .500 or better. Robbins is now 9-9 for his two years and has won nine out of the last 13 games.

Group gets tougher

This week Coach Robbins said that the going will get even tougher as they invade Las Cruces, New Mexico, to meet the Aggies from New Mexico State.

The Aggies, under coach Jim Wood, have a 3-5-1 mark against some top opposition and will show one of the nation’s top running backs in Ron “Po” James. James, who can be the all-time leader in rushing stats for the NCAA, will create a big problem for the Vandals defense as he is averaging 4.9 yards a carry and 154 carries and 560 net yards.

The Aggies also have a talented quarterback in Joe Pisarcik. He has completed 61 passes, with 9 for 100 yards or five touchdowns. They can throw the ball with good accuracy and our secondary will get their toughest test of the year,” Robbins added.

Idaho’s team statistics improved over the weekend as Frank Doctor now leads the rushers with 478 yards in 104 carries for a 4.6 average. Fred Riley is second with 281 yards. Jack Parade leads the receivers with 18 receptions for 223 yards and two touchdowns. Rick Seefried has completed 33 passes in 111 attempts for 416 yards and two touchdowns.

Ricardo Castillo, adding two more field goals to his record, leads the point parade with 53 points on 15 of 16 PAT’s and six of 11 field goals.

Seefried injured knee

Coach Robbins reported that Seefried, who injured his knee in the West Texas State game, should be ready to go on Saturday. The injury is not as serious as it seemed when he left the game late in the fourth period. There were no other serious injury reports for the Vandals.

The Vandals will leave Friday to fly to El Paso, Tex., to attack Las Cruces for a 5:30 p.m. workout. The team will stay at the Sheraton Motor Inn at El Paso.

"We are ahead of many other institutions"

By Patsy Walker

Seated in a rocking chair reminiscent of the John Kennedy days, U of I attorney Jon Warren last week said that it was "inevitable" that students will be allowed to vote in their college towns.

"If the student meets all other requirements for voting, then his status as a student must be taken as a neutral factor. A registrant cannot treat an 18 year old student any different than an 18 year old non-student.

The attorney cited a study-where in terms of mobility, a student is less mobile than a non-student.

"If a construction worker knows he will be in town for only a certain period of time and registers to vote, he has no problem. A student cannot be denied the same right."

Warren emphasized that this was his legal opinion on the matter, and may or may not reflect his personal feelings.

The 30 year old attorney began his work for the University July 1 after four years in private practice as a partner in Martinson, Gale & Warren and one and a half years as city attorney for Moscow. While he now does "about the same legal problem", he finds the problems larger.

There are many, many contracts - construction contracts, architectural contracts...

"I miss adoption cases," Warren said, "but in private practice you often see people at their worse." He attributes this to the emotional conflict that people find themselves in at the time.

Like a number of students, Warren, his wife and two sons have taken to the hills and reside nine miles from town on Moscow Mountain. Originally from California, he completed his undergraduate studies at Berkeley and attended Law School at the U of I.

As University attorney, his job incorporates counseling the University of its legal rights and weaknesses and keeping it away from legally hazardous areas. In addition, since the University is an arm of the state, he interprets constitutional law as it applies to the students and faculty in the areas of free speech, due process, obscenity and tenure, for a few.

He is "perfectly willing" to see students, although his time usually does not allow for it. Students with problems are usually referred to a downtown attorney or to Captain Davey, who can often answer student questions.

Warren is responsible to the president, vice-president and the regents and said that if a student brought a lawsuit against the University, he would represent the university.

"I have never seen a case where the interests of the university and the interests of the students were mutually exclusive, though.

Warren refused to comment on both the John Orwick and Y O. McNeice lawsuits against the University. He cited rules of the court and legal ethics as reasons for not commenting, since both cases are in the process of litigation.

"A case is in a courtroom, not outside it, and jurors must not be prejudiced beforehand."

McNeice is suing the University for a quarter of a million dollars over his former contract as head football coach; Orwick's case concerns his payment of non-resident tuition.

Using his experience in private practice as a basis, Warren said he felt there were "more areas of cooperation than contention" between the police force and the students.

They make mistakes in judgement and do not always get a conviction, but on the whole they are exceptional and very courteous."

Warren did not know the desires of the University administration concerning the regulation of alcohol on dormitory premises.

"The policy determination is theirs; I only advise legally."

The attorney did say that regulations were lenient in areas such as having firearms in the dorms and the Student Bill of Rights. "We are ahead of many other institutions."
