Community, university discuss family housing

by Libby Matthews

"The University wants to know if the community can supply family housing for the same price that the University can," said Thomas Richardson, vice president of Student Affairs. He explained the meeting was held between Moscow residents, university students, and university personnel.

The meeting, held at Johnny's Cafe Tuesday noon, was sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce. The purpose was to help coordinate efforts of the community to cooperate with University needs.

Richardson began by expressing the university's needs and demands.

Candidates on television

Tuesday night from 6:30 to 7:30 KUID Channel 12 is presenting the candidates for ASUI president. Mike Kirk will moderate questions from a panel of students in the ASUI.

Voting locations named

The ASUI elections for President, Vice-President, and 13 Senators will take place on February 23 and 24 all day. The voting places are the Student Union Building, Wallace Complex Lobby, Administration Building, the Physick Science Building, and the Lobby of the Thopiplis Tower.

Hay appointed to Regents

Janet Hay of Nampa has been named by Governor Cecil D. Andrus to fill the empty seat on the Board of Regents, left by the resignation of Steele Barnett of Boise.

"That completes Barnett's term which was to end on March 1, 1974," Gov. Andrus said.

Senator Jack Murphy banded his gavel, saying he would have the chamber cleared if there were future outbursts. He warned the Senate that if the measure is passed, "there won't be enough policemen to patrol the dances on graduation night." The remark brought another outburst from the gallery.

"Let us be statesmen, not politicians," said Barker in opposition.

Effects was housing

Student Room 1874 was packed to the rails with young people eager to learn of the housing problems that concern them. The meeting was held Tuesday night at 6:30 p.m. to discuss the proposal to build on the 5 acres of land on the Mill Race where a new women's dormitory may be built.

"We want to support the dormitory. We are interested in hearing the options that are available to us. We are concerned about the possibility of losing the land," said Senator John Baker, R-Bah, who said he would be willing to vote separately on the provisions contained in the bill, but he warned the Senate that if the measure is passed, "there won't be enough policemen to patrol the dances on graduation night." The remark brought another outburst from the gallery.

"Let us be statesmen, not politicians," said Barker in opposition.

Sen. Baker attacked the senators who make presentations and think they are statesmen, but are nothing more than politicians. He reminded the Senate that they have a bill on the table that will solve one of the problems that concern the community.

"Let us be statesmen, not politicians," said Senator Baker in opposition.

Sen. Radelle said he was against the bill because it would affect the students involved in the housing problem. He reminded the Senate that the lawmakers are not the only ones who can work together in the family housing problem and reach a satisfying solution.

Sponsor of the measure, Sen. John Mix, D-Moscow, said the bill won't open a huge warehouse of problems that responsible parents can't handle. He said he would vote for each of the amendments to the present law, singularity, but felt an all-encompassing measure would be an "absurdity" heading for the Supreme Court.

He contended the bill was "a delaying tactic in the youth's right to adult status."

"I am against the bill because it would affect the students involved in the housing problem. He reminded the Senate that the lawmakers are not the only ones who can work together in the family housing problem and reach a satisfying solution."

Day care

Last semester a group of parents who shared a common baby-sitting problem started a cooperative day care center for their pre-school children.

The center is open from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Saturday at the Trinity Baptist Church. All sitters are volunteers. A charge of $1.50 a month per child plus three hours of work a week at the center are the two requirements of the co-op.

The idea of the center is not just to baby-sit, say the parents. It allows the children to interact with other children of the same age. Each day there are pre-planned educational activities and organized play for the pre-schoolers.

Approximately 25 families support the center and an average of 19 children use the facilities.

College Bowl

This year’s ASU College Bowl competitions will begin Thursday, February 24, at the SUB, with matches at 6:30, 7:00, and 7:30 p.m.

Teams of four students, two from each of two living groups participate in the competition, which is similar to the old College Bowl television show, Rick Mohr, chairman, said. Teams earn points by correctly answering questions from a wide variety of academic fields. The winning team then goes on to further competition at a later date. First, second, and third place teams will receive trophies at the end of the series of competitions.

The matches will be held throughout the spring Monday and Thursday night in the Brough Theater at the SUB.

Bike accident

A University of Idaho student was injured last Tuesday evening when he swerved to miss an approaching truck, then slid and hit a tree 26 feet from where he veered.

Terry J. Silva, 19, of the Sigma Gamma Chi house, was headed east on University Ave. on a bicycle when he swerved to miss a truck heading west on University. After veering Silva hit the snow and the south curb of University Ave. Silva slid 26 feet from this point and collided with a tree.

Police said the truck heading west was intending to turn left onto Blake St. when Silva swerved to miss it. Silva was taken to Gritman Memorial Hospital where he is reported in good condition.

Police say that the accident is still under investigation.

This is the second major accident involving vehicles on the University of Idaho campus this year.

Heitman explains Gem billing

The failure of the ASUI and the Gem to explain the new billing policy, when the Gem of the Mountains converted to a biannual, resulted in some confusion and misunderstanding with the living groups.

Greg Heitman, chairman of Communications Board, said recently.

In the past, he said, living groups have paid for pictures in the Gem, but because of a gap caused by the biannual, the living groups refused to pay. The ASUI and the Gem should have contacted each living group to see whether or not they wished to continue the past practice, he said.

One of the problems concerned with the billing is that many living groups, because of the gap, failed to budget for their pages in the Gem.

Another area of controversy has been the off-campus section. The Gem eliminated class pictures because of the duplication of pictures in the living groups and an off-campus section was added to include students not in the living groups. Living groups have protested the fact that the off-campus pages are paid for by the Gem's budget, but not, the living groups. Heitman explained that the off-campus section did not have the sketch of the house, or activities of the group listed.

"The reasoning behind this is that the living group section is considered a public relations service to them," Heitman said. "It helps in their recruitment."

The halls also protested paying for the pages out of their current treasuries, when most of the pictures are of people who do not reside there anymore.

"To clear up the problems, the plan is to verbally contact each living group to see if they wish to continue the present set-up," he said. "If they agree to do so, they will be charged the page price. If they decide not to, then those students will be set up alphabetically in an on-campus section."

Those who agree verbally will be sent a written contract to finalize the agreement, he said.

The Communications Board has taken the stand that the obligation for paying was still there, based on past practice and even considering the above problems," Heitman said.

I enjoyed reading Molly and Kris's article on the women's lib movement as viewed by some men, but I feel that they did not fully understand the problem. You see, it is fine and good to point out shortcomings and weaknesses in the sex roles, but it is equally important to point out the problem. The problem, in my opinion, is a lack of understanding among the students of the University of Idaho. When I read the article, I was surprised to see how little attention was given to the problem. I believe that understanding the problem is the key to solving it.

I am writing to the Idaho Argonaut to express my disappointment with the article. I believe that the article did not fully address the issue, and that it was not written in a way that would be accessible to the students of the University of Idaho. I hope that future articles on this topic will take into account the perspective of the students, and that they will be written in a way that is more understandable to them.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]
Students express aims

Presidential candidates
Denny Eichhorn
Eichhorn, who has no experience in student government, says "It is an advantage not to." He said the structure all depends on what you want to do. Eichhorn claims the "act effective." He also believes, "I think that any government is act effective if it reflects that will, but it doesn't always. There is a lack of communication.

He said that people won't want name entertainment.

"Those who are in charge don't have good taste in music, especially. He suggested that something like the Blue Mountain Rock Festival, with free entertainment, should be made available. The gym should also be available in case of rain.

"Nobody cares about the ASUI except those into it. They are working the way they think is best. Maybe the whole idea should be changed to get students interested.

He is in favor of the voluntary ASUI. He said it should be put on a voluntary basis as a student corporation. It should start from scratch.

"Tenants' Union is also favored by Eichhorn. He said he wanted it incorporated as a cooperative. People would rent to a Tenant's Union that would hold it and use it to fight landlords and get lower rents.

"It worked at Berkeley," he claims. He feels it is "a good idea to keep tenants at a minimum. Probably, some travel is done that isn't necessary.

"I don't think the ASUI is as trivial as we make it, although it sure seems foreign," he said.

Roy Eigaren
A student body president, according to Eigaren who has served as president pro tempore of the senate and as a member of several ASUI committees and organizations, "must administer the government structure and be the students representative to the faculty, the administration to the university board and ultimately the university state..."

The existing ASUI structure needs revision according to Eigaren. He feels, in the executive branch, he plans, if elected, to introduce a proposal to the senate to divide the present departments into three or four "operating categories."

Also, commented Eigaren, the committees need to be evaluated to see if consolidation is possible with some of them.

According to Eigaren, the ASUI should continue to involve itself in areas of student concern. Listens, but the ASUI's plan are 1) making sure the new student council is completed as a multi-purpose recreational facility, 2) student input in academic matters 3) increased student opinion on athletics 4) betterment of student services.

Eigaren feels that this year's senate was careful in the expenditure of money except in the area of travel. Travel for the president and senators, said Eigaren, should be limited to in-state.

Money should be reserved next year, Eigaren said, for Big Name Entertainment issues and forums and increased student services such as a campus employment agency and an off-campus housing referral.

Eigaren does not favor a voluntary ASUI stating that: "A voluntary ASUI is not the solution to anyone's problem. The present proposal is to eliminate ASUI fees and make membership in the organization voluntary is foolishly for several reasons most important of which is that students would pay more money for less service.

"I am running for vice president, comments Glaub, because I think I can make the ASUI more of a service organization that we can all benefit from and help create a flow of information to keep us all better informed."

Glaub, who has served as station manager of KUOI, feels that an important qualification a candidate for vice-president should have is knowing what issues are at and how the channels are being run for resolving them. Glaub feels his experience in ASUI committees and KUOI has been beneficial in this respect.

The ASUI should involve itself in student issues, according to Glaub. "I think," said Glaub, "it should be a primary service organization to provide programs for ourselves and also an opinion relaying voice within the university." Glaub feels abut could be done about representation, stating that it should be among the first priorities of the senators to keep in touch with their living groups.

Glaub feels, also that some ways need to be found to better represent off-campus students.

A voluntary ASUI would serve no practical purpose, according to Glaub, to allow a voluntary ASUI for the simple reason we would not gain anything." stated Glaub, "All that we can have as a group would die or never be formed, and we would have nothing to say about decisions affecting us and our money. We would be kidding ourselves to think that we would get a free reduction if we went for the voluntary ASUI proposal. No way.

Steve Seale
Seale sees a returning to "emphasis on the campus as an issue." Seale expressed the opinion that "students should be represented by the student organization it should deal with student matters.

"Speaking to the problem of representation Seale said "The problem with representation is that it all boils down to personal desires on the part of the senators. Some of the trouble can be eliminated by the districting with senators elected from and responsible to specific living groups. I have heard at least one restricting proposal that has merit."

Seale believes improvements can be made in strengthening the executive works so that communication among ASUI bodies and student is quicker, cleaner and more often." He would leave changing the structure so that the senate "which hopefully will have a good notion from student input of where changes should be made."

Seale endorses the concept of community government. "It is an excellent notion if students are allowed to work with the faculty and administration on academic matters representation should be made on a academic basis."

Seale claims the existing ASUI is functional if properly used. He suggested a solution to the problem would be a "dominant executive structure."

He views the ASUI as an effective organ

Vice-presidential candidates
Mel Fisher
Fisher feels that responsibility and credibility should be accorded to the senate.

"During the past year, many of the senate's decisions were not fully carried out in the administration. It should start from scratch.

"The Senate is also favored by Eichhorn. He said it wanted it incorporated as a cooperative. Fisher, would rent to a Tenant's Union that would hold it and use it to fight landlords and get lower rents.

"It worked at Berkeley," he claims. He feels it is "a good idea to keep tenants at a minimum. Probably, some travel is done that isn't necessary.

"I don't think the ASUI is as trivial as we make it, although it sure seems foreign," he said.

Ric Glaub

Glaub feels abut could be done about representation, stating that it should be among the first priorities of the senators to keep in touch with their living groups.

Glaub feels, also that some ways need to be found to better represent off-campus students.

We would be kidding ourselves to think that we would get a free reduction if we went for the voluntary ASUI proposal. No way.

Robie Russell
Russell, now a senate member, feels that his experience and acquaintances he has gained through service in the ASUI will aid him in the position of vice president.

"Seale will be a great candidate," he said. "He believes the ASUI could become more effective with a better method of representation and communication.

Seale is against a voluntary ASUI because "it provides important services and student input to the faculty, administrators and regents." He believes the ASUI could become more effective with better communication and representation.

Seale sees the ASUI's philosophy on funding should be re-evaluated, according to Russell. He would like to see ASUI funds directed into areas of student services, big name entertainment and issues and forums.

"Students should be provided with the services they want," Fisher said. Fisher feels the vice-presidential candidate is not in favor of the proposed voluntary ASUI. He said the present structure is the best means of providing a liaison between the student and university.

The ASUI work well in the interest of the student. To eliminate it would be to cut all the channels that are open now," said Fisher.

Phillis Lord
Delta Delta Delta

Lord, who has served on several ASUI committees, feels that the current structure of the ASUI senate is workable. A larger body, she says, would destroy the effectiveness of the senate and a smaller one would not do a thorough job of representation.

Lord feels that the senate and the ASUI need to re-evaluate their goals and “determine what direction it is going and what it intends to accomplish for the students.”

“...the senate...” states, “...would strive for goals as a body rather than as individual individuals. Perhaps they could accomplish more in this way.” Lord concluded.

Lord does not favor a voluntary ASUI on grounds that as a voluntary organization all student services now offered by the university are non-existent. She also felt that a voluntary ASUI would result in an unrepresentative senate. Noting that it never come up during the year, Lord commented that a follow-up should come in areas such as FFAC, the stadium and student services.

Roger Bartholomew
Off-campus

Bartholomew is concerned with student representation in the ASUI and feedback from the ASUI to the students. An effort should be made, according to Bartholomew to more fully inform the student population about what is going on in student government.

Every living group and minority group on campus should have an appointed senator to represent them, according to Bartholomew. Commenting on the concept of a voluntary ASUI, Bartholomew said:

“I think its good from the standpoint of those who do not participate or use campus facilities since they would be spared the $14.25 but I think that many activities would crumble from lack of funding or usage.”

Michael D’Antonio
Upham hall

D’Antonio feels that basically the ASUI is sound but that the performance of the senators has not been adequate.

“They haven’t actually gotten involved with the people they represent,” said D’Antonio.

The ASUI is not an effective organization, according to D’Antonio because students are not involved enough in the day-to-day business of the ASUI. D’Antonio commented on the failure of senators to tell him about the issues.

D’Antonio said if he would favor a voluntary ASUI, he would not favor making it voluntary because the chances that students would be less active involved.

D’Antonio favors the district system, where the campus would be divided into districts and senate representatives are chosen from each district.

Mike Roach
Fiji

“...the area of student services is very lacking. There is definite potential and...” Roach said, “...I would favor a voluntary ASUI, it would be a better representation of the student body.”

Roach feels that students should have more say in how the Student Senate handles and fund services that they want.” said the candidate.

Tom Hill
Sigma Alpha Epsilon

Tom Hill has the opinion that “...what we need is a concentrated effort to make the system work, and I think that it is workable.”

Hill disagrees with the ASUI because student government has lost contact with the student body.

Hill is opposed to the idea of a voluntary ASUI. He feels that a system would allow one group of students to use services paid by another group. “I feel that by enrolling at the University, a person accepts certain responsibilities, and membership in the ASUI is one of these.”

Hill sees the expenditure of student funds to be the most important issue facing the senate. He suggests “...serious evaluation of what student funds are used for.”

Hill can’t see any advantage of an academic senate. According to Hill the present system allows for cross section of academic disciplines. “The senate deals with a great many things which are not of an academic nature... I think that the student faculty committees suffice when opinions are needed on matters such an curriculum.”

John Hohnhorst
Phi Tau

Senate candidate John Hohnhorst feels the ASUI must adhere more closely to the wishes of the students.

There’s nothing new-fangled about supermarket games, giveaways, weekend specials and loss leaders. These come-ons have been around for a long time. But even more old-fashioned than these things is the idea we run with. Savings, pure and simple. We just mark everything we sell at the lowest possible price and leave it that way. Bob Scribner
Shoup Hall

The present structure of the ASUI prevents certain groups of political orientation from receiving a fair chance in expressing their rights of speech and press, according to Bob Scribner, senate candidate.

Favoring a voluntary ASUI, Scribner feels it could offer more equitable services than now. “I support a voluntary ASUI as a formal way of public participation by students,” he said. “It allows the student to have a voice in the group.”

Scribner also feels that the student senate is better able to determine which programs are no longer used or needed.

Kathy Brainard
Alpha Chi Omega

A voluntary ASUI would diminish the need for Student Services, said Kathy Brainard, candidate for senate.

“Student services (without increasing fees) must come from reallocation of the existing funds. I am in favor of using this means to increase the relevance of the present system to benefit the individual student,” said Brainard.

It is important that students get involved in state, local and national affairs, according to Brainard. Brainard feels that ASUI’s travel expenses should be limited and decreased from the present figures.

“It is the responsibility of the individual voter to be well informed,” she said. “ASUI should initiate student involvement at the university.”

Kennalee Battles
Off-Campus

Battles contends that the senate as it exists presently is a pretty inefficient body. She feels one way of correcting the situation would be to combine the senate position with that of committee heads in the ASUI.

“Such an act,” Battles commented, “would increase the efficiency of the senate plus save money for the student.”

The senate candidate does not favor a voluntary ASUI on grounds that the decrease in money available would cause the demise of several student services.

Battles feels fee hikes could be important during the coming year including better representation of off-campus and independent students and improvement of the housing situation.

“ASUI comments Battles further, “I can never hope to be a representative of all Idaho students, however, it can provide student services that might otherwise not be provided such as draft counseling.”

Garth Douglas
Theta Chi

Douglas contends that the ASUI is effective and its structure justly reflects the students, even though he feels something should be done about off-campus representation. He also feels that students need to be more involved in the ASUI.

The freshman candidate feels that representation could be improved by having representatives see to it that living groups have monthly meetings with the ASUI and having representatives visit the living groups to discuss issues.

Douglas contends that money not being used by the ASUI at present should be invested.

"This money," he commented, "should either be invested in some way or allotted to some good student purpose."

Douglas opposes the idea of a voluntary ASUI on grounds that no one would pay any less for it and student services would be lost.

Gregory Casey
Lamba Chi Alpha

Casey doesn't feel that the ASUI can really represent everyone. (The ASUI is not representative of all campus groups.) According to Casey, students are not proportionate or legally interested in campus affairs. He does, however, support the concept of a district system, commenting that such a set-up would be more representative than having thirteen senators at large.

The freshman candidate states that student services are not serving some of the time. He does, however, support a voluntary ASUI because he feels that representation and the benefits of student services would be lost. Casey also feels that no money would be saved by students, even if the ASUI were voluntary: "... saving money would never materialize. We can't expect a drop in fees."

Student government could be improved, according to Casey, by closer watch of the budget and more dedication to students.

Mike Krieg
Fiji

The senate must be administered efficiently, according to Krieg, by senators who are concerned and willing to listen, to serve and to work toward positive goals,

"The ASUI must administer to the interests, needs and desires, creating enthusiasm and thus being more effective," said Krieg.

Cleaning up the ASUI's doorstep before venturing into areas not really concerning the students, is a primary aim of the freshman candidate.

Krieg is against a voluntary ASUI and would like to see every program on the budget looked over.

"I firmly believe that student government at the U of I should be one that is primarily concerned with the needs and desires of the students it represents," he said.

"If elected, I will do my best to exemplify one who is sincere about student interest and is willing to carry them out," said Krieg.

Mark Falconer
Willis Sweet Hall

"I believe the existing structure of the ASUI can be reorganized with no real problem," commented Falconer, "by instituting an election district (where each senator elected by a certain number of living groups or at large by off-campus people.) I feel the effectiveness of the ASUI would greatly increase.

Falconer advocates more student services including more weekend activities, better movies and big name entertainment. He opposes the concept of a voluntary ASUI stating that:"The intent behind a voluntary ASUI is to save the students $14.50 a semester. In reality the students wouldn't get this money back but would see it go to areas that the Board of Regents would decide on," he concluded.

Mike Moore
Gault

Moore sees no problem in the present structure of the ASUI but he does feel that the entire system should be revaluated.

"The ASUI budget and methods of representation were listed by Moore as subjects to take priority in the coming year."

"There are a couple of things I'd like to see done," commented Moore. "First I think it is the duty of every senator to get back to his living group and let them know what is going on. ... I'd also like to see a better way of deciding what groups each senator represents. I don't want to see the senate pick groups at random ... I'd like to see certain blocks of people in the same area represented by one senator."

"... I would like to be a part of bringing ASUI back to the campus, and making it a vocal, creative, responsible arm of the student body," said senate candidate Ed Litteneker.

Emphasis should be put in the expansion of ASUI sponsored student activities, he said.

"The candidate does not favor a voluntary ASUI and feels the travel budget should be limited. The purpose of the ASUI is to act as a service to the student in all aspects of campus life, and to represent students in policy and regulation changes," said Litteneker.

"... The problems within the ASUI are not the result of the structure, but the failure of the representatives to carry out the policies that have been set down," said Clive Strong, senate candidate.

Strong feels the student is still left out of a majority of issues he should have a voice in.

"The foremost issue that the ASUI should become involved in is getting student opinions and ideas into the student government. I would also like to aid in the area of student voice within the administration and providing better student services," he said.

"The obligation of student government is to represent its members, and only those trips which are directly involving the concerns of the students should be permitted in the travel budget," he said.

"The candidate is not in favor of a voluntary ASUI."

Robert M. Nowierski

Nowierski would like to see senators on have the senate create the offices of academic, administrative and financial vice-president to be filled by three senators. These offices, said Nowierski, would be for academic structures and proceedings, everyday ASUI business and budgeting, respectively.

He also would like to look into a student co-op store set-up, where the student could buy books, shampoo etc, without having to go downtown.

Nowierski feels the extra charge paid to ski at North-South Ski Bowl should be ended. He pointed out that the ASUI doesn't charge WSU students extra for using the golf course here but that students, other than WSU students must pay an extra fee at North-South.

Voting representation on faculty council; investigation of cheap student apartment housing, support for FPAC, and support for the senate's request to guarantee the installation of the athletic stadium multi-use flooring are other issues Nowierski favors.

Movie review
The father of american cinema

By Chas. Johnson, UI Film Society

There are giants, and there are founders. In the case of DW Griffith both of these terms apply, for he was the founder of the American cinema, and the scope and influence of his pictures are felt even today, more than fifty years after the production of his greatest works.

To call Griffith the 'Father of the American Cinema' does not mean that he was the first moviemaker, but that he was the first to envision and utilize film as an artistic creation in its own right, without intertwining it with dramatic elements as a primary consideration. Even to speak of him only in relation to moviemaking in the United States is an understatement, for his influence has been no less important in other countries. After several failures, Leni Riefenstahl was a communist, and invited him to be the chief of the Russian film industry. The careers of such directors as Pudovkin, and of the German, Erich von Stroheim, may be directly linked to the charisma of Griffith.

With the opening of the University of Idaho Film Society's Spring Series this coming Tuesday, another Griffith film will be screened which in a sense departs from the aura of spectacle inherent in the above-mentioned giants. Way Down East is different in several ways, most noticeably in scope and characterization. After the dynamic war scenes in Birth of a Nation, followed by the overwhelming sets of Intolerance, Griffith chose a work for which he had long been preparing. In the opening, Griffith used the dramatic National cyclist and his imprisonment as a means to introduce the conflict which was to dominate the story. The opening scene was conceived as a mysterious ride, culminating with the ice-crest rescue sequence—a masterpiece of the use of color in cinema (for which Griffith had taken out insurance to guarantee that the necessary blankets would be forked over to the rescuers at the critical moment). It's all real, down to the ice upon which Miss Gish drifts toward her death, and the horses of Richard Barthelmess' sudden (and unscheduled) plunge into the icy lake are all due to the actual rescue at the brink of disaster.

Lillian Gish was superb, the moviemakers came in dreeses.

Having no need for the colossal constructions of Intolerance, nor for the detailed recreating of historical scenes and locales as seen in Birth of a Nation, Griffith instead utilized to the maximum the realities of nature that were available in New York, where he had recently moved. Consequently, after the opening, we are left with only Intolerance. And some realities these new locations provided. The ending of the film, showing the devastation wrought by the war, and the resurrection of the victims, culminating with the ice-crest rescue sequence—a masterpiece of the use of color in cinema (for which Griffith had taken out insurance to guarantee that the necessary blankets would be forked over to the rescuers at the critical moment). It's all real, down to the ice upon which Miss Gish drifts toward her death, and the horses of Richard Barthelmess' sudden (and unscheduled) plunge into the icy lake are all due to the actual rescue at the brink of disaster.

Genius with innovations

A great deal has been written about the innovations that Griffith was supposedly responsible for: flashlight, parallel action, etc. This is in a sense untrue, for he actually invented few completely new techniques. As was stated earlier, his genius lay in the fact that he was the first to incorporate such innovations in a film to produce dramatic effect. In the same way these ideas had been little else than a series of camera tricks, with no artistic purpose behind them. It was Griffith who first saw the psychological value of a closeup, which would subsequently play a large role in the visual expression, rather than through body movement. And it was no simple task to introduce such 'radical' techniques in his pictures. His bosses, for example, strongly opposed the use of closeups, arguing that the public 'would not pay good money to see just a face, a part of a body—they would demand the entire body!' Only by promoting this method in conjunction with Rembrandt's use of partial lighting (chiaroscuro) was Griffith able to have his way.

It has been pointed out that with film we have the only form of artistic expression in history whose development is available to us to see in its entirety. The twelve pictures offered this semester by the Film Society almost succeed in embracing this whole period. For less than the cost of a showing, you can add to your enjoyment, as well as to your knowledge, of this outta sight industry. Screen doors and information on each film are available at the SUB Information Desk. $1 a couple, $4 single admission.

What's happening

by Mark Fritsler

I have some apologies to make concerning an item in last week's column. I mistakenly mentioned a movie that was to be shown last Friday and Saturday, "Dr. Strangelove," only to discover later that it was not to be shown. I was rather well informed about this accident later. However, this week, the somewhat ineffectual SUB wall calendar is correct in announcing the showing of the Wallace Cunningham film, "The Mouse That Roared." This Peter Sellers' classic will be seen in the SUB Theatre at 7 and 9 p.m. tonight and tomorrow night, admission 50 cents each, 75 cents for couples.

I highly recommend this film for everyone. Not only is it an extremely funny movie but it is also classic Peter Sellers before the full Hollywood impact of his enormous success ("The Pink Panther", "Shot in the Dark," etc.) spoiled him. It is a slightly more slick work than his small, witty, and relatively unknown English films like "I'm Alright, Jack" and others that established him as a tragi-comic of consummate skill in socially relevant cinema. However, "The Mouse..." is very relevant and Sellers is fantastic—and untarnished.

This film dwells on the thesis that the best way to win a war with the U.S. is to lose it. Once lost, the U.S. will flood the defeated with billions in economic aid. Sellers, from a minuscule and fictitious European country, leads a band of a few men to try to invade the U.S. and to surrender in an entertaining, unfortunately, plan goes awry and Sellers wins the war, therefore losing. Ancient battle of a "Doomsday" super-bomb while the band of soldiers is trying to find someone to surrender to in New York during air raid warnings makes them masters of the world and the U.S. surrenders to them. Bad plot is pure entertainment and really funny. Treat yourself and catch this one.

We've been concentrating a great deal of time on films in and around the University these days in this column and on this page. I would like to hear from some readers with their reactions and opinions of the cinema. I believe that there is very much to be learned from the films that are available here and have been trying to keep you informed on what is really good, informative, and entertaining. Your ideas would be very welcome.

Another interest that has been ticking around in my head is the subject of music. We have been suffering a great drought of good music for some time. How long has it been since people have really sat down and listened to a new piece of music? Remember how exciting it was to discover Crosby, Stills, and Nash and how important it was to tell your friends about it? What has happened to the "shock of discovery" and the delight with finding a new artist or album before anyone else and to turn them on to it?

There is much going on in music and many artists that are appearing but the Superstar is missing. Carole King, Kris Kristofferson, and Carly Simon are great and creative but the excitement is a softer growth that gains slowly as they are listened to over time. The point is that these few are the exceptions that prove the rule and recorded music is languishing. I think that there is much to be found in music but it's hard to see without the neon and the "ear-outs" to point the way, or, perhaps, to obscure real perception of whether you're witnessing quality or not.

Now seems to be a time when creative flows are below the surface or are searching for new expression. New trends appear, such as the increasing influence of Eastern pop and western in popular music, but are seen too vaguely to imply much, yet. Perhaps the "music has died" as in "American Pie" or perhaps it is merely in hiding. I hope to expand on this theme in the future and hope to receive some response from music lovers who think me wrong. Soft rock, dead concerts, what's happening? Not to mention classical, jazz, rhythm and blues, and good rock and roll.

For entertainment this weekend, it's either Boone's Farm or watching Paradise Creek rise and fall—or both.

All-campus variety show set for tonite

Senate expands Hartung's proposal for start of FPAC

The ASUI Senate adopted a much expanded version of President Hartung’s proposal to divest the $3.50 student infirmary fee to float a loan to start Phase I of the Performing Arts Center.

A comprehensive five point proposal was set forth, which includes provisions for funding of the recreationally undersurfacing of the athletic complex.

1. The new package will divest the $3.50 infirmary bond fee plus the $3.00 SUB third floor remodeling fee to complete funding of Phase I of FPAC.

2. This would realize a considerable saving as the time period for the loan would be reduced from 8-10 years to 4-5 and the amount of interest would be reduced considerably.

3. The Phase I funding is complete and the new package will immediately revert to a restricted Student Union Development and will be reinstated by the ASUI for the future of the Student Union to be planned in the interim.

4. The $350,000 loan repayment from the golf course development will accrue to the ASUI General Fund and will allow the ASUI from the ASUI reserve shall come to the ASUI General Fund. In addition the ASUI hasn’t previously received any interest on funds in the General Reserve.

5. The ASUI will be assessed a service charge for administrative or accounting services provided by the Administration.

6. The University is in the University, community and nationally in regards to counting F’s in the student’s grade point average. Fifty-five per cent of the schools in the west and 55 per cent in the nation do not count the F’s in the grade point.

7. There is a psychological advantage in using the NC. Students don’t like to be labeled a failure. The new method allows one to do away with such labeling,” said Jones.

8. Donald Reid, director of University Development in charge of the arts, said the Performing Arts Center, expressed favor with the proposal and indicated that larger donations might now be more easily solicited.

Council approves new grading idea

A majority of the Faculty Council favored the concept of a revised grading system (alternative) in the Tuesday meeting.

Robert Jones, professor of Mines and chairman of the University Curriculum Committee, presented the four-proposed concept. First, a student with an NC (no credit) instead of an F. This grade would mean he did not fulfill the objectives of the course for whatever reason while not meeting the objectives of the course.

Secondly, the NC grade would not be computed into the student’s grade point. Thirdly, in repeating a course the last grade would be computed into the grade point. Finally, the present pass/no credit option would be retained as the pass/no credit option, revising the new system.

Jones asked the council to refer to the proposed system as a revised grading system instead of noncumulative, as noncumulative has bad connotations.

The professor of Mines demonstrated the disadvantages of such a system with facts and figures.

"Presently the University is in the minority regionally and nationally in regards to counting F’s in the student’s grade point average. Sixty-five per cent of the schools in the west and 55 per cent in the nation do not count the F’s in the grade point," he said.

"There is a psychological advantage in using the NC. Students don’t like to be labeled a failure. The new method allows one to do away with such labeling," said Jones.

Edward I. Dobler, professor of business, pointed out that often a student will change departments after doing poorly in the first department. Upon entering his new department he will do well.

The proposed system will not jeopardize his grade point because of his failure in the first department," said Dobler.

Professor of Education, Edward Kelly, suggested the proposed system include D’s as well as F’s in the NC grade.

The Council decided against this idea after Paul Dierker, professor of mathematics, remarked, "Often students are willing to receive a D because it is their sole requirement rather than fail the course over...After all, "D" is a passing mark while an F isn’t.”

The Council agreed that the law school should be excluded from the proposed system.

The Council, after voting in favor of the concept, sent the plan back to the UCC for further development. The Council passed an instead of an appropriate disqualification system a limit on the number of NC’s a student can receive before the expulsion be added to the plan.

How subtle is women’s discrimination? By Olive Stump

It’s a challenge to prove discrimination, but it was done when this reporter interviewed a male about women’s liberation!!!

Before interviewing John Hippie, U of I student counselor, I was unaware of the degree our culture has enforced and reinforced women’s discrimination. To be sure, I knew of all the obvious areas of discrimination, like in pay scale, sex ratio of women in the hospital services (70 percent), in comparison to hospital administration jobs (10 percent). But I never realized how unconscious discrimination can be and is.

The examples are endless. Society norms say men can be a husband, father and breadwinner, but women can’t face the conflict of wife, mother and worker. It starts right from the time of birth. Women are given dolls while boys get trucks. If a girl acts like a boy during youth, she is called a Tomboy. The adult society grins and say “Don’t worry, it’s only a stage and she will grow out of it.” In kindergarten the teacher is always saying “Boys, take the girl’s and your own chair over to the center of the room. It’s girls.” Age five women are assumed to be unable to carry a chair for themselves. Such assumptions are made all the way through school. Women are told they are not good at sciences and mathematics. They should concentrate on English and home ec. Out of the U of I freshman class, 77 percent of the men are in business, science and agriculture and only 22 percent of the women. Agriculture is such a male dominated discipline that there isn’t even an agriculture honorary for women. Alpha Zeta, the agriculture honorary is for men only. The women in agriculture suffer because on applications for employment and advanced degrees they have no honorary they can claim membership in.

As to job relations, the list of discrimination is endless. Men go into bars alone and no one thinks anything of it. A woman enters a bar and she is automatically pegged as a pick-up. Men can call for a date but women must sit home and wait.

As Hippie says, “Women are walking around with blinders on. My job as a counselor is to help women see the other alternatives. Women’s Liberation, as I see it, isn’t a woman’s problem or liberation, it is a people problem and liberation.”

The blenders are on our culture, not women. I don’t advocate burning your bra or jock strap, nor do I think about discrimination and the assumed roles for both men and women. Only when you have seen all the alternatives can you make a reasonable judgment on how you as a person fit into the scheme of things.

Senate favors outside concert

Blue Mountain Number Two may be held May 7, 1972 upon approval by the Facility Use Committee. The Senate approved V-President Tom Sloan’s resolution which would provide an outside concert along the same lines as the one held on campus last year.

A bill authorizing the grant of $400 for promotion of Blue Mountain Number Two was sent to finance committee.

A bill amending the constitution to create a voluntary ASUI was defeated by the Senate Tuesday evening. Sen. Steve Russell in sole support of the bill said that he felt the existing structure of the ASUI created a "shambles." The reason for some type of student government to be directed to areas of more concern for students.

The Senate approved appointment of Luther Brady for the Senate vacancy created by the resignation of Jane Anderson.

Brady, previously a strong proponent of the voluntary ASUI concept, now feels that there is a need for much more student involvement in the ASUI, and will continue to work on a voluntary system primarily to generate some type of response from the people.

An expenditure of $222 from Program Development will send Sen. Doug O’Donnell and Ali to the National Student Lobby Conference in Wash., D.C. March 22, 24. He will attend workshops designed to find needs and methods of lobbying for issues in and for the State of Idaho.

Unconsciousness and subtlety seen in women’s discrimination

By Olive Stump

How subtle is women’s discrimination? So subtle it’s very subtle. The reporter interviewed a male about women’s liberation!!!

Just for experience

Students recommend exchange program

Go anywhere for a year," Judy Anderson recommends, "just for the experience, just to appreciate Idaho more!"

"Any time away from this school is a good experience," Marc Wah comments in a different vein. "Most students go four years here—that gets pretty stale."

Anderson, a junior English major from Illinois State University, is out here traveling, meeting friendly people, discovering the West.

Wah, an Idaho architecture major, has just returned from four months in Hawaii where he lived in the middle of Waikiki.

"It's a good opportunity to travel," she comments after a semester in the East, "but it's on a transient basis. You meet people, it's cool talking to them and finding out about them. But it's temporary."

"It's a freak atmosphere. There are so many people they don't care how they look."

"People seem a lot colder 'cause there's a lot more people back there," Murray points out, although the psychology department is one of the best in the country, she found the school with 12,000 students too big and impersonal.

Bigger the better

"The bigger they are, the better I like them," Marc Wah commented after his fall semester at the University of Hawaii.

"As a whole, it's much rather go to Hawaii than here. The location is better, there's a variety of students, and you couldn't ask for a better climate—although it's poor to study in."

From a school in Normal, Ill., with twice the enrollment, Anderson has mutual feelings about her new Idaho home. "I wish I could finish school here," she says, "I'd take the West over the East anytime."

Anderson remarks that the atmosphere is friendlier here and the teacher-student relationship is better.

"Campuses in Illinois are a lot more tense," and that doesn't mean Idaho is apathetic. "We didn't have recycling centers when I left."

Although she was sent to Idaho mistakenly when she signed up for the "East Coast, Anderson is now enthusiastic and says, "It's freer here, and people are so much more friendly."

Yvonne McIntosh wouldn't leave her school in Grambling, La., in the fall because of football season, but now she's another student spending the spring semester on Idaho's campus.

Freer and open

Coming from Grambling College, a school that, with 4,000 enrolled, is actually smaller than Idaho, McIntosh finds this campus more free and open.

"I like the idea of no curfews and coed dorms," she says. "It's going to be hard to get used to rules again."

McIntosh notes changes—Grambling is predominantly black, the dress is more casual here, the food is better, and this campus is less political.

Recommended the NSE program for just about anyone, McIntosh comments, "You've got to be a person willing to mingle with others, you have to like people.

"I'm glad I came," she adds, "except for the rain, and the hail, and the snow..."
Bikers urge city safety action

Throughout the city of Moscow, bicycles and their riders can be seen competing with cars for positions on the streets. The Moscow Bikeway Action Committee, a group of concerned biking enthusiasts, are trying to do something about the sometimes dangerous conditions on the Moscow streets.

According to Dennis Albright, a member who helps guide the group, the committee is currently working on a proposal to make bicycle paths through their city. An amendment will be eventually through certain areas of the Moscow countryside.

The bike path proposal the committee would like to present to the city concerns making two major bike-lanes, one running east-west on 2nd Street from East Side Park to the Glorimark Park swimming pool, and one north-south on Jackson Street. The lanes would be from eight to ten feet wide with two-way bike traffic.

No parking of cars would be allowed on these streets.

A problem with the proposal is that it allows riders to move their bicycles both with and against the traffic. A city law says that bicycles must move with the flow of traffic. If the plan should go into affect, an amendment will have to be made to the traffic code.

The committee has also planned smaller routes on side streets which would hook-up to the major two paths. They would also like to have signs put up around town to designate bike paths so that car drivers would be more aware of the area.

The committee plans to present its proposal to the Moscow Traffic Safety Council for their approval. If the plan is accepted, it will be passed on to the City Council for their consideration.

Total cost of the project is estimated at $5,000. Albright said that the price is so low because of digging invasives.

Notice??

Since the University was ranked exactly 54 years, 3 months and eight days ago the Co-rec swimming for February 18th today has been cancelled. Sorry folks!

Jackrabbits hunted

Well folks! They’re off and running at the Jackrabbit Race Course. The development is that jackrabbits are being hunted, trapped, in southern Idaho. Why? The answer is actually quite simple. An Italian shipper, 45-year-old Nero Battistuzzi, is paying from $1.75 to $1.85 per rabbit to have them captured for him. He then ships them to private game preserves in Italy and Sicily, where hunters pay more than $50 per rabbit to hunt them.

Every spring, youngsters form jackrabbit hunting parties and roam over the countryside with clubs. Battistuzzi is an old hand in the jackrabbit business, having organized similar hunts in Poland, Hungary and Romania. His organization is based in Twin Falls and is known as Bunny Enterprises. One problem encountered in the capture of rabbits is that they cannot be held by the ears. Battistuzzi says, “You must hold them by their hind legs. If you grab a jackrabbit by its ears, it will die within 24 hours.” Most of the hunting is done at night. The jackrabbits, blinded by headlights from four-wheel drive vehicles, are herded into huge nets. From there they are shipped off to the wilds of Italy. How’s that for a really jumping story.

Skiers second in McCall invitational meet

Despite erratic weather conditions, the Vandal skiers took second place in their own invitational ski meet last weekend at McCall. The University of Montana won top awards at the meet.

Idaho's Mark Steigenmeier and Dave Kirk scored first place finishes in the Downhill and slalom events, while Dan Hardesty finished second in cross country.

Arrfinn Rusten, Dave Kirk and Kris Baika finished fourth, fifth and sixth in the jumping events.

Coach Bob Zapp said that he was disappointed in the weather and general skiing conditions which he feels hampered his team's efforts considerably. He said that Montana barely beat Idaho with a slim 12 point edge.

Weber State and Boise State finished third and fourth behind Idaho and Montana at the meet.

The team is now looking forward to this weekend's competition at the Big Sky Championships at Bozeman, Montana. It will also be the site of the NCAA Regional Qualifying Meet at which the top teams will qualify to compete in the NCAA Championships. It will be held at Winter Park, Colorado, March 17, 18, and 19. According to Zapp, approximately 15 teams will be competing for the two qualifying positions, with about seven four-way teams, downhill, slalom, cross-country, and jumping.

The team will leave tomorrow for Bozeman, where downhill events will begin Thursday, slalom and cross country, Friday; and jumping on Saturday.
