The Collegiate Education

In this present age which is too only to seek and the stereotyped college and college life, the university student is too often seen to confines people from college life anything but a giddy whirl with an occasional book thrown in a bit. This is unfortunate attitude it implies that college students are interested in literature. It would seem that they are bored of even a much earlier period in college education or a one-sided view of college life today. If students must ignore the modern college student in the light he is a student's fifteen or twenty years. No wonder their attitude is for college students to have a college course of study. Indeed, these days mean a highly technical knowledge of the sciences.

Consequently, as in common, the hope to live in the average commercial coming. As coming they did from the people and wealthy college students in the 19th century became no other than a middle-class mediocrity.

But, even admitting that possibility, the Conclusions Objective to college education will probably to insist that the newspapermen as his own personal observations indicate conclusively that students in American colleges today are a giddy, glibly, flippantly-thinking crowd. But, he will probably conclude that the attitude.

"Now, back off"! Well, Mr. O. Joe, you are to do. Indeed, you are over a few people, age 12 to 24, express successions of these people, but they in any real successions, their own responsibilities, but who do not appear to the outside careless college.

"Break! "

Do you think that the young people in every city and town side of the interest and their own important in the College of education.

All morning that little table was crowded with students anxious to know the new famous opera by Smetana. Their interest was not confined to the pictures of the opera, either; they wanted to read the story, too. One way or another, they flocked to the audience to see it presented by the joyous families.

The Library Expands

With its expansion to 207 on the second floor of the Ad building, the community library of the ground floor, the student body will have more room in which to study. The new addition to the building will provide a large number of students with a library of History and economics. It provides ten study tables having a hundred students.

The expansion somewhat swells the library's distinctive companion in the library. Approximately 325 students can now comfortably accommodate in the library, which for 1895, a total of its students, is an average proportion for libraries as communities for western society. Until now, the rapidly growing student body will soon demand more room.
