Surguring architecture causes some problems

By Dave Warnick

alarldne President for the University of Idaho

"As far as I'm concerned, it's one of the best small colleges in the country and one of the best academies on the Pacific Coast," said Paul Blanton, administration assistant for the UI. Blanton, an Idahoan who has taught at the University of Idaho since 1958, has seen many changes in his department.

One of the most important has been the recent attention of the architectural department. In the past, the university has been criticized for being short-funded, but this year, the administration has declared their major as a Work in Progress.

Space is limited, and the department has been forced to begin using more space for their work. This year, the department has taken over one of the Old Woman's Cathedrals, where classes are still held, but it has been converted into offices and studios. The new space has been a welcome change for the department.

In addition to the new space, the department has also received a new professor, who has been teaching at the university for the past two years.

The new professor, Dr. Dolores Fisher, brings a fresh perspective to the architectural department. She believes that architecture is more than just building; it is also a means of expressing ideas and emotions.

"Architecture is not just about making pretty buildings," Fisher said. "It's about creating spaces that can inspire and motivate people."

This new perspective has been welcomed by the students, who have seen a change in the way they are being taught.

"I think the new professor is really helping us to think about architecture in a new way," said Sarah Johnson, a senior in the architectural department. "She's really challenging us to think outside the box and to consider all the possibilities of what architecture can do."
Wittman believes that the students actually finally begin to see a need for money in the ASU administration. The last held campaign was three years ago, and the student body had no idea what it was doing. The election was over before any information was presented to the students that their money is being used wisely. The coming election will be different. Wittman is a student himself. He believes that the students want change. They want something new, and he aspires to give it to them. Wittman advocates self-supporting. He thinks that if students can support their own activities, they should be encouraged to do so. He says that students should be satisfied with the amount of money they are spending on the activities, and if they are not, they should be willing to do without them. In this way, the students will have more control over their activities and will be able to spend their money in a more effective way.

Conclusion

The campaign continues until the election, and students are encouraged to vote. The candidates hope that their campaign will be successful, and they are looking forward to the results. They believe that the ASU election is important, and they hope that the students will turn out to vote. They believe that the election is a chance for the students to make a difference, and they hope that they will do so. The candidates are excited about the campaign, and they look forward to the results.
the plan is in every way available for student aid. This was the plan the president had to overcome to make the budget work. The President's concept of the plan was that the President would give the budget request to the planning office, which would then prepare a document for the President to present to the State, and the Governor would then sign the budget into law.

Have you ever stopped to think about the planning office? It's a complex program on campus—coordinating activities, and it is handled by the Office of University Planning and Development. In addition, all the planning and computerization is done by the Planning and Computing Department.

What's the plan for next year? It's going to be a "streamlined" plan. It will be a "simplified" plan. It will be a plan that is easy to understand.

In conclusion, the Nixon plan is a success in money available for student aid. This was the plan the President had to overcome to make the budget work. The President's concept of the plan was that the President would give the budget request to the planning office, which would then prepare a document for the President to present to the State, and the Governor would then sign the budget into law.

Nixon aid cuts hurt poor students

The planned Nixon cuts are off again. According to the Administration, a good part of a budget bill was cut out in the Senate and brought back again in the House. However, the final outcome is not yet known.

If the President has his way, most painful programs will either be cut or eliminated. There have been suggestions of a limited educational Opportunity Grants, Federal Student Loan, and work-study programs. What will happen to student aid?

The student is supposed to come up with the money一辈子。This plan fits the president's students well because it brings the educational Opportunity Grant money down to about $120. After getting the grant, one need not worry about living expenses.

Come home, E.H. come home

What can one say about the man on the hill (Hartung) except that he is never in when you need him. He acts as if he is 61 in some other part of the state and country.

In the past couple of years it seems that Hartung has been gone from Moscow more than he has been here. It is unknown whether it was the "feather-ripping" runs at places like Kent State that scared him away or the fact that there is nothing very important for a university president to do here in Moscow.

As one thing is certain, the role of public relations man Hartung has taken in recent years seems to have first priority over his duties on campus.

Actually if we were judging his presence behind his desk, and his public statements, he would probably have flunked out of this University a long time ago.

The man's vice-presidents have taken over many of the administrative duties during which the pseudo-politics man has forecasted for greater pastures.

Perhaps it would be for the distinguished president to stay at home and refrain from traveling, and allow Frank McCrackin and his vice-presidents more public relations initiative.

After all, his in is Ad 105 — not on the road — and the students are still "Mr. President, what does it mean?" Come home — President Hartung — come home.

Legalizing contraceptive information

Towards voluntary pregnancy

Betty Hansen

President and First Lady Ronald Reagan, each in their own way, have provided leadership in the area of contraceptive information. Reagan has recently signed both a presidential executive order and a bill providing federal funding for family planning services. If these measures are to be effective in spreading the preponderance of contraceptive information, the focus must be on means other than the distribution of information. There have been few areas more abused than the contraceptive field. Women have been denied information about contraceptive means because of the fear that this information will detract from the normal course of events. In addition, the fear that condom use will lead to pregnancy and abortion have often prevented the dissemination of contraceptive information.

One area in which the Reagan administration has demonstrated its commitment to contraceptive information is the Family Planning Program. The President and First Lady have both expressed their support for contraceptive information, and this has been reflected in the Family Planning Program. The program has been expanded and its services have been increased in order to provide contraceptive information to those who need it.

The use of contraceptive information is a matter of personal choice, and should be made available to all who need it. The Reagan administration has shown its commitment to contraceptive information by providing funding and services to promote its use. However, the government cannot be solely responsible for providing contraceptive information. It is the responsibility of all citizens to ensure that contraceptive information is available to those who need it.

Presidential candidate steps down, criticizes professional politicians

The other day, a well-known political analyst on a national television program made the following statement: "The presidential candidates are nothing more than a bunch of professional politicians. They are more interested in their own careers than in the country. They have never experienced the hardships and challenges faced by ordinary Americans."

This statement is not only unfair and inaccurate, but it is also dangerous. By referring to the presidential candidates as "professional politicians," the analyst is implying that they are not qualified to hold the highest office in the land. This is a serious underestimate of the qualifications and experience of the candidates.

Presidential candidates are selected by a process of primaries, caucuses, and conventions. These processes are designed to ensure that the candidates are well-qualified and knowledgeable about the issues facing the nation. They are also expected to have a strong record of service and dedication to public service.

While it is true that some presidential candidates may have more experience in politics than others, it is unfair to assume that this necessarily disqualifies them from holding the presidency. Many successful presidents, including Abraham Lincoln and Franklin D. Roosevelt, have had extensive political experience.

Moreover, the President is not only the head of the executive branch, but also the head of the nation. This position requires a broad range of skills and abilities, including the ability to work with Congress and other government officials, to make tough decisions, and to lead the country during difficult times.

In conclusion, while it is important to hold the presidential candidates accountable, it is also important to recognize their qualifications and experience. The President is a critical position in our democracy, and it is important to ensure that the person who holds it has the necessary skills and abilities to do the job.

Ex-GI denies Army is gay

The other day, in the New York Times, an article appeared about a former GI who had been discharged from the Army because of his sexual orientation. The article stated that the GI had been discharged because of "gays in the military." This is a gross misrepresentation of the policy of "don't ask, don't tell.

The policy of "don't ask, don't tell" is designed to prevent discrimination against lesbians and gay men in the military. It states that no one should be asked about their sexual orientation, and that if someone is discovered to be gay, they will not be discharged.

In the case of the GI discussed in the article, it appears that the discharge was based on a policy of "no gay men in the military." This is a clear violation of the policy of "don't ask, don't tell,

The GI in question had been discharged because of a policy that is no longer in place. The policy of "no gay men in the military" was replaced by the policy of "don't ask, don't tell" in 1993. Since then, the GI in question would have been able to serve in the military without fear of discharge.

It is important to remember that the policy of "don't ask, don't tell" is a bipartisan policy, and has been supported by both political parties. It is important to continue to support this policy, and to ensure that it is enforced fairly and consistently.

The Stillerarg bungle

The Stillerarg bungle has been a problem for years. The residents of Stillerarg have been complaining about the poor quality of the housing provided by the government. The housing is dilapidated and in need of repair, and the residents are tired of living in substandard conditions.

In response to these complaints, the government has announced that it will be providing new housing for the residents of Stillerarg. However, the residents are skeptical of this announcement, and have expressed concern about the quality of the new housing.

It is important for the government to ensure that the new housing is of high quality, and that the residents of Stillerarg are not left in substandard conditions. The government should be transparent in its decision-making process, and should consult with the residents of Stillerarg before making any major decisions.

In conclusion, the residents of Stillerarg should be given a voice in the decision-making process, and the government should be held accountable for its decisions. The residents of Stillerarg deserve to live in safe and comfortable housing, and the government should work to ensure that this is a reality.
The Argonaut Endorsements

Wurster, Mitchell --two for the road

By ROB GRAMER
Editorial

Less than two weeks remain before officially submitting the endorsements of the candidates for student body president and vice president of Academic Senate. The student body is in the process of making its final decision on which candidates to support. This decision will be based on a combination of factors, including the candidates' qualifications, experience, and ability to represent the student body effectively. The candidates' platforms and proposed solutions to the issues facing the student body will also be taken into consideration.

Carl Wurster

We all know that Wurster is the most qualified candidate for the position of student body president. He has demonstrated his leadership and organizational skills during his term as ASU Student Body Vice President. Wurster's experience in student affairs and his commitment to improving the student experience make him an excellent candidate for the position.

Wurster has a clear vision for the future of the student body. He understands the challenges facing our community and has developed effective strategies to address them. His approach is based on collaboration and engagement, ensuring that the student body is involved in the decision-making process.

If you care about the future of the student body, then vote for Wurster. He is the candidate who will bring the energy, innovation, and dedication needed to make a positive impact on our community.

M. Mitchell

Mitchell is a strong candidate for the position of student body vice president. She has a track record of leadership and has demonstrated her ability to work effectively as a member of the Academic Senate. Mitchell is committed to representing the student body and ensuring that their voices are heard.

Mitchell's platform focuses on improving the student experience and enhancing the quality of life on campus. She believes in the importance of fostering a sense of community and has developed innovative strategies to achieve this goal.

If you care about enhancing the student experience, then vote for Mitchell. She is the candidate who will bring the energy, creativity, and dedication needed to make a positive impact on our community.

Action for the non-travelers

To the Editor:

As a student, I am concerned about the negative impact of non-travel tourism on the environment and the local community. Non-travel tourism involves visiting places that are not easily accessible to the general public, often with minimal planning or preparation. This type of tourism can have a significant impact on the local environment and can contribute to the erosion of cultural heritage and traditional way of life.

We can take action to address the issue of non-travel tourism by raising awareness and encouraging responsible travel practices. This includes supporting sustainable tourism initiatives, supporting local businesses, and being mindful of our impact on the local community.

Together, we can work towards a more sustainable future for our planet and the communities we visit.

How about a little Richard? For that matter try a big one. Do you like to talk continuously and nervously, even if you do, then the game of politics is for you.

The best politician in the world can express himself without a single word. If you can fulfill these quizzical kinds, then you're eligible. They don't promise you a rose garden, just the presidency.

Everyone has a little politician in them, as the game progresses in being held, fixed in the glory of saving education (from some wise torture with their name), just trying to put something of a public service. If you are on the last roll of the dice and without a discerned direction, you qualify for a politician, possibly Secretary of the Interior.

The game was created on the first day of Congress. Everyone gets a chance to sell what they did over the vacation. Then the important boxes in once, organizations can stick around and gain a bill or two if they will.

Each player needs follow the game rules.

Top women swimmers to meet at U of I

The AIAW (Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women) recently selected the University of Idaho for the site of the national meet for the women's (all year) for the first time in 1973. AIAW has revealed all the details of the National Women's Swimming tournament which will be held at the university.

The AIAW is the governing body for all women's varsity sports in the United States. It provides procedures and provides a set of standards that will help to qualify in the regional meets before they are eligible to compete in national championships.

"People in this meet will be at Olympic-level swimming," said Virginia Nichols, who is the publicity director for the event. "Slight thought on the part of anyone who is thinking of coming to this national meet in February, please read the rules, and then cancel your plane ticket."

The Idaho swimmers, Nancy Hall and Lane Spalding, were qualified. With hopes high, the two women are working hard to meet the standards that will enable them to become eligible for the national meet in February.

"We are a good team," said Hall, "but I think it's going to be an uphill battle to get the whole team eligible in one shot."

Nancy Hall was selected because of her consistent performance and regional meets before they are eligible to compete in national championships.

Birds decorate floor in Life Science

Over a thousand birds of different species now inhabit the third floor of the Life Science building. These birds have been staffed and prepared for teaching by the department.

Two hundred of these birds are maintained by the Life Science department.

Dr. Karlberg, a member of the Life Science department, said that the birds have been maintained by the students in the department. He added, "The students who work on the birds are enthusiastic and dedicated.

There's a new program in the building that will be available to all students. The program is called the "Bird Cooperative," and it is funded by the Bird Cooperative Foundation. From the time in the fall of 1973, new students will come to the University Campus for 16 weeks to study the birds that are kept in the fall. They will need to get a pocket and handle the proper equipment, such as the final handouts of the final manual for the course.

Most classes have changed to a seminar format in order to keep the students' minds focused. In these classes, reading helps the students, and so far the students have found it helpful. Large lecture sessions are also occurring, and so far they've helped the students. The students are knights, and they have found it helpful."

The instructions for students are "If there are too much time, remember to get information, and then you are done."

Students are also required to attend two seminars each week for the courses. These seminars are required for the course. They will be attended by the students who are enrolled in the course.

The new students will be housed in the residential community of the University. This community will be available to them for the entire month of the course.

The courses are "Student Orientation," "Student Orientation," and "Student Orientation." They will be attended by the students who are enrolled in the course. Slade optimistic on Moscow shopping center

By Mary Socinski Special Correspondent

When the City Council voted unanimously to annex and zone the part of University land on the west- bound Washington Highway, they brought the project of the Great Shopping Center a step closer to realization.

All that remains now is for the Board of Regents to finalize the contract and meet with University and development officials April 5 and 6.

According to Business Manager Craig Slade, the University will lease the land to the developers, McCarthy Inc., for a 50-year period. The University will also receive a percentage of the gross income of the stores in the shopping center.

"Exactly how much money the university will receive depends on how much the university pays for the land to be sold," Slade said. "It is customary to get the same percentage in the national figure of land rental to the University. We'll be getting about $100,000 a year in a few years."

Slade explained that the University would not be making this large an amount of the funds that the University would receive in the first few years since the income of businesses will grow gradually. He did say however, that the University will definitely be benefiting from the center.

Regents approval pending

"What will be done with the money the university receives from the new center will depend on the Board of Regents," he said. "They are the ones who decide what we will do with the money." When asked if he had any doubts if the Regents would okay the lease, Slade answered, "No, I do not. They have already approved the contract we have with McCarthy and what we have done up to now. I think if they'll go back on their word.

The only problem I could see is that there is one member currently on the board who signed the original contract. This should be no problem since we can show that the center will benefit the college, the city, and the state.

Jobs for students

Besides the money the university will receive from the stores, the school will get other benefits, Slade said. He said that the new center will create many new part-time and summer jobs for college students as well as bring a wider selection of goods to be purchased. The new center may also act as a "magnet" to draw more shoppers into the area.

"Even though we pride ourselves in being a small town with a small population, we could see a few more people," Slade said. "The center will bring new families with it — those who will be the administrators of the stores."

This is the best for our interest. These developments in population in our area and else we will not get our proper share of money for the University.

According to Earl McCarthy of McCarthy Inc., the center is to be built in four sections. One and perhaps two of the sections will be built at the same time. The remaining sections will be added as soon as a majority of the business space is rented.

30 acres

"We need about 30 to 30 per cent of the area leased by businesses before we will begin to build," McCarthy said. "This will assure us that we will be able to rent the space."

The area being leased by the university covers 39 acres. Thirty-nine of these acres will be covered with buildings.

The Palouse Empire Mall will be the center’s official name. It will contain a number of stores, the exact number is not yet known. The businesses found there may vary from grocery stores, banks, restaurants, to department stores.

"I am not able to tell you the names of the stores that will be there yet," McCarthy said. "If I did, it might cause some problems about renting the rest of the space out. I have to wait until the leases are finalized — or at least $5 per or so — before I can give you any definite store names.

All stores will be connected to an air-conditioned mall much like the University City library and shopping center in Spokane. All stores will have doorways opening into the center covered by walkway as well as to the street. A large parking area will be made surrounding the center.

The construction plans of the center will not have any cost problems. McCarthy said. Problems have come up. Perhaps the biggest controversy over the center is the question of taxes.

Disagreement

"According to state law, the state cannot tax the improvements made on university land but cannot tax the land itself," Slade said.

"The big question here is if the legislature can pass laws to make the university pay a certain amount of money in lieu of the tax on the property. We can’t get the attorneys to agree on this point. This is a large territory for Idaho law — the question of taxing university land like this has never come up before. In the near future, it may be possible that state legislation will clear up this problem. Till then I do not know what to say."

The problem of water and sewer systems has been worked out with the city of Moscow. McCarthy said. "The University just put in a well north of the center area."

"They sell their water to the city and in return the developers will buy the water from the city system."

Overlaid zones

McCarthy said that the shopping center will look up with the nearby city system.

"The developers will install lines that are larger than will be needed by the stores," McCarthy said. "This is upon request of the city engineers. They know that the area will grow in population and new systems will have to be installed in the near future. So instead of doing it twice, we’ll just install overlaid lines to take care of this extra future load. We’ll install them but the city will pay for the overtaxing."

Slade and McCarthy both said that they have not received any violent objections from the downtown merchants. Slade explained that the businessmen saw the new center as a magnet which will draw shoppers to Moscow — downtown as well as to the new center.

"Personally, I think it is a marvelous proposal," Slade said. "I can’t see how the college, the town and the state could not benefit from the new center. I think it is for the good of all concerned."

I feel that if Moscow doesn’t grab this opportunity, some town in Washingtom will. Why shouldn’t we take the advantage?"

Library hours extended one hour

As a result of an ASUI senate last fall, the library is now open two hours longer than it was during the fall. This change was made by the new University Librarian, Richard D’Antorio.

D’Antorio is director of libraries, said that prior to the change, the library was open after the 6:30 p.m. closed hour. "We didn’t close then, if we had, more people would come.

The position was added to ASUI won by Steve Collins. A group of student engineers had happened that D’Antorio try to get the library hours changed. "I am glad we did it," D’Antorio said. "and I am glad we are open the extra hour."

"I never the original hours," said D’Antorio. "I did not think it would work out as well as it has and I am happy with the change."

"The extra hour was open by 600 students at full registration. If 1 percent of those students come to the library during the extra hour then there are 600 people on campus interested in the library during that time."

The library will be open 7 days a week and 12 hours a day. Also during the summer and holidays, the library will be open between certain hours. The summer hours are Monday through Thursday, 7 a.m. to 10 p.m.; Friday, 7 a.m. to 9 p.m.; Saturday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.; and Sunday, 1 p.m. to 5 p.m.

With the Army ROTC Two-Year Program.

Army ROTC usually takes four years of college. But you can do it in two.

If, for example, you couldn’t take Army ROTC during your first two years of college.

Or if you just didn’t want to take Army ROTC before.

But now you recognize the benefits.

You start the Two-Year Program by going to our six-week Basic Camp the summer following your sophomore year.

Camp — a little classroom work; some challenging physical training — teaches the Basic Course you would have taken during your first two years of college. You’re well-paid for this six-week catch-up.

Then, after camp, you complete your Advanced Course during your junior and senior years.

Maybe you’ll decide that the chance to get real management experience earlier than most people will be worth a lot later on.

Maybe you can use the $100 per month subsistence allowance you will get for up to 10 months of each school year.

Or the opportunity for an Army ROTC scholarship is exciting.

The Army ROTC Two-Year Program is another chance for a better career, through Army ROTC. Talk over the Two-Year Program with the Professor of Military Science at your school.

Or use this coupon. There’s no obligation.

Army ROTC. The more you look at it, the better it looks.
