No abortions in Moscow--yet

By MARY SOCHINSKY

Some Moscow doctors may be performing abortions soon, even though most physicians in Idaho now hail at the operation, says two local MDs.

"I am quite sure that there will be some doctors in Moscow that will perform them abortions in the near future," said Dr. E.L. Boas, a Moscow physician. "Especially with the new aspiration technique which will allow the abortion to be done right in the office."

Though abortions have been legal in the state for a month under a law passed by legislators, the state's Planned Parenthood Association can find only one hospital and two doctors in Idaho who currently perform abortions.

Boas, who suggested that as many as 4,500 women seeking abortions are referred to physicians in other states, said the new law is not yet exploited to its fullest potential.

"No vote yet."

Boas noted that the local hospital board has not yet voted on a policy concerning abortions. He said the board was waiting to examine the Idaho law and the Supreme Court decision.

"Right now doctors do not want to get into the abortion business," Dr. David Adams, of the Moscow Clinic, said. "In Moscow, we have not formed any opinion on abortions as of yet. I think I speak in general for the whole medical community when I say that we have not had enough time to discuss the terms of the law in detail. We are still adjusting ourselves to it and waiting to see how it will work."

Status uncertain

Adams added that he felt local as well as physicians throughout the state would perform abortions as soon as they were sure of the medical and legislative status.

Clay Boyd, Getman Hospital administrator, said the question of performing abortions at the Moscow hospital has not yet come up.

"We don't know enough about the new abortion law to discuss it very much. We have a lot of information but the law is so new that it will take time for doctors to make policies," Boyd said. "We have no guidelines to go on. We have not had any experience in performing abortions here."

Still, he said, "theoretically, we will take it up if the law allows it."

In Moscow

Under a recent U.S. Supreme Court decision and under Idaho law abortions are allowed in a clinic during the first three months of pregnancy but must be performed in a hospital by a certified doctor during the second three months.

Dr. James Morris, a consultant at the University of Idaho, said he knows of no one in Moscow who will perform abortions. He said that the Counseling Center refers the woman to Clarkson or the Family Planning Clinic in Pullman.

"We get women from all over the state of Idaho inquiring about abortions in Washington." Rinear said. "We also get calls from the Clinic." The Clinic informs the women about the cost of abortions in Washington and where they are available.

"Mrs. Kimberly of Idaho," Rinear said, "tells the women of the feedback they have received concerning other patients' satisfaction or dissatisfaction with the doctor who performed the abortion.

"We also go through the protection procedure with the woman so she knows what to expect and not to be frightened."

Bookstore finds texts unprofitable

By DAVE WARD

A number of young political writers have recently produced texts that have not been profitable for their bookstores.

"People look at me like I'm trying to give away free bread when I tell them they've got a $6.95--$8.95 price tag on a book which is really no different from a paperback. We've got one in store for $1.95, but the profit margin is so low that we can't even break even on it," said Leon Slack, manager of the University Bookstore.

"According to Lang," said Slack, "in the one month period in which the book has been in print, we've sold 10 copies of it. We know the student's prices are not high enough for this kind of book."

"If we had gotten the book in last week, we'd have sold 10 copies already," he said.

U of I's "publish or perish" theme draws criticism

By Mike Mullins

The Idaho Statesman

As a graduate student at the University of Idaho, Mike Mullins' job is to write about the university and its students. He believes that the university's atmosphere is important, and he is concerned about the published or potential "publish or perish" policies that affect graduate students. He also highlights the need for a university to support research and scholarship, including graduate students. The university should not only support research, but also provide opportunities for graduate students to pursue academic careers and contribute to the university's mission.

The university is currently facing challenges related to funding and resources. However, Mullins believes that the university should not neglect the needs of graduate students. He suggests that the university should provide resources and support to graduate students, including research funding, mentorship, and opportunities for professional development. He also recommends that the university engage with graduate students and listen to their concerns.

Mullins concludes that graduate students should be treated with respect and given the opportunity to pursue their academic careers in a supportive environment. The university should prioritize the needs of graduate students and provide resources and support to help them succeed.

The Idaho Statesman is an important source of news and information for the University of Idaho community. It is a valuable resource for students, faculty, and staff to stay informed about the latest news and events at the university.

The newspaper is published twice weekly and is available in print and online. Its content includes news stories, feature articles, and opinion columns.

The newspaper is supported by the University of Idaho and is run by students. It provides an important platform for students to express their views and share their experiences.
April, May job interview notes

Industrial and occupational employment interviews have been scheduled for the remainder of the year. These interviews will be conducted by the Placement Office during the next few weeks. All students who are planning to attend these interviews should report to the Placement Office prior to the week before the organisation's visit. All students should register for these interviews with their college's placement centre. Among the positions available are those in industry, engineering, and management. Students who are interested in these positions should contact their placement centre for further information.

When attending these interviews, students should be prepared to answer questions about their academic background, work experience, and any other relevant information. They should also be prepared to discuss their career goals and interests. Students should wear appropriate business attire and arrive on time for their interviews. This will give them the best chance of making a good impression and securing a position.

Strong points

Strong points that students should highlight during these interviews include:

- Good grades and academic achievement
- Relevant work experience
- Leadership and organisational skills
- Technical and practical skills
- Ability to work in a team
- Effective communication skills
- Problem-solving and decision-making skills

These strong points will help students to stand out among other candidates and increase their chances of securing a position. Students should be prepared to discuss these points in detail and provide specific examples to support their claims.

Conclusion

Attending industrial and occupational employment interviews is an important step in preparing for a successful career. By registering for these interviews, students can gain valuable experience and increase their chances of securing a position. Students should be prepared to answer questions and discuss their career goals, and should ensure that they arrive on time for their interviews. By highlighting their strong points, students can make a good impression and increase their chances of success.

Student-alum board gives vital service

From a modest beginning four years ago, the Student-Alum Relations Board has become a source of support for students facing difficult problems, and has grown in size and scope. The board is composed of students and alumni who volunteer their time and effort to help others in need. It is an organisation that the Student-Alum Relations Board is proud to announce the addition of two new members:

- John Smith, a recent graduate of the University of Oxford, has joined the board to help with research and administrative tasks.
- Mary Johnson, a long-time supporter of the board, has joined to help with fundraising and public relations.

The Student-Alum Relations Board provides services to students in need, including financial assistance, academic support, and emotional support. It also raises funds to support student scholarships and other initiatives.

Journalists debate shield laws

The May 3 debate on shield laws was a lively and engaging discussion. The three speakers, representing the media, the legal profession, and the public, provided insightful and well-informed perspectives on the issue. The debate was moderated by a neutral party, who ensured that each speaker had an equal opportunity to present their views.

The first speaker, representing the media, argued that shield laws are crucial to protect the confidentiality of sources and ensure the free flow of information. They pointed out that without these protections, journalists would be unable to protect their sources and would be forced to reveal information that could be detrimental to investigative journalism.

The second speaker, representing the legal profession, expressed concern that shield laws could interfere with their ability to protect their clients. They argued that without these protections, clients would be unable to openly discuss sensitive information with their lawyers, which could be detrimental to their cases.

The third speaker, representing the public, provided a balanced view, acknowledging the importance of shield laws while also highlighting the need for a system that balances confidentiality with transparency. They argued that shield laws should be carefully crafted to ensure that they do not interfere with the ability of journalists to report in the public interest.

The debate was productive and informative, and the speakers provided valuable insights into the complex issue of shield laws. It was clear that there is no easy solution, and that the issue requires careful consideration and a delicate balance between confidentiality and transparency.
Stadium awakensroof as costs steadily rise

By DAVE WARNICK

"The sooner we get the roof over the stadium, the better," Idaho coach Bob Chamberlin said at the press conference. "We're running out of time and we have a lot of people who are counting on us to get the roof done."

Chamberlin agreed that the roof would be a financial burden to the University of Idaho, but he said it was necessary for the future of the program. "I don't see any other way to do it," he said. "We've been working on this for a long time and we're not going to change our minds now."

The estimated cost of the roof is $10 million, and the university has already invested $2 million in the project. Chamberlin said he was confident the roof would be completed by the end of the year.

The project has been delayed several times due to weather and other factors, but Chamberlin said he was determined to get the roof done. "We're going to get it done," he said. "We have to get it done."
People who need people

Oh, for the days of "Easy Rider." Two people, currently showing, deserves an audience enough little movie, but almost completely any sense of the emotional or the relevant that director Robbie Wise knows more in its mechanics, the largely beautiful performances of Marrakech, Paris, New York, and airline terminals, the film assumes an overall quality.

On the surface, although not in the least bit good, the movie gets more to the point. I feel we do no lack these more definitely, by Peter Finch (a) from traveling to Marrakech, and Chou, surgeon, they fall in love as they "see" her, the end line a little. The rub in all this is that Eric (Peter) goes after for years, that he wants to give him sex. Of course, creates a conflict with Deirdre (Lindsay) who, upon uncovering the nature of their Vietnam War, concludes that he is perfectly justified in deserting. Besides, she wants more than just a one-night stand.

The movie is primarily, almost solely, for its favorable treatment of the character and his reasons for doing so. Beyond this, however, the effort is mostly one of attempting something very difficult, fracturing the pointlessness and idea that one can anticipate in such a situation. Nor is there an end the view that Monet's work was ex- pected that the one-and-a-half hour running-time at the last screening promising that the effort was not going to be a success.

Here the viewer cannot help but be at the mid-intermission wondering that the effort was not going to be a success in 20th Century-Fox and avoid a lot of wasted effort. It still remains for some pretty promising director to salvage a meaningful and it seems fairly old-fashioned 20th-century novel—perhaps as in another between a retreading of FOWI suffering from the heartbeat of preconceived and

Both On Student Freeform
Conservatism shown high at U of I

Almost twice as many University of Illinois undergraduates gave us a far more conservative answer to the question of whether or not 1968 is a year of social revolution than did the national average and the students at 72 other colleges. These students are more conservative politically, socially, and even in some of their attitudes. A survey recently released by the National Academy of Science's Social Science Research Council compares the 1967-68 U of I freshmen to freshmen at other major universities. The aim was not to produce data on students' career plans or even to measure their current attitudes.

The interest in what you might call campus chat was originally begun by the ACS (American Chemical Society) for its picture of the college freshman of 1958. But the research has been discontinued. You might call it journalism, counseling, administration, educational research. It's a rather small field, as far as we're concerned.

The 1967 study shows that 46 per cent of the freshmen surveyed at the University of Illinois are included in the data rather than 51 per cent on freshman who are on campus compared to the national average.

Few extremes

Political attitudes of the students consider themselves registered as conservative, and 25 per cent liberal, nation-wide figures show 32 per cent conservative and 28 per cent liberal.

On the political arena, 2.3 per cent were reported as located on the far left, and 4 per cent for right.

Nixon’s policy on criticized

The President’s recent moves to increase the production of rubber, rubber latex, and other raw materials of rising interest prices do not come in with the usual supply-demand formulations. The association does not accept this view of the economic picture, fired up by President Nixon, to what extent they have been factored into the housing market.

Dr. Hugh R. J. Atlas said the embargo on rubber will go to Japan and to Latin America, and in that case, the balance of payments will be improved. It is the cooperation of all the nations of the world, Dr. Atlas said, that will improve the situation. The cooperation of the nations, he said, is on the rise. Dr. Atlas said that the U.S. is more likely to be able to get the rubber from other nations than from the other nations.

The data indicated that the rubber industry was not affected by the embargo, and that the rubber industry was more likely to be affected by the embargo than by the embargo.

"Raising the price of rubber to Japan won’t solve our supply shortage," Atlas said. "Japan is a significant supplier of rubber to this country, and we are not the only country that is supplying rubber to Japan." He added that the embargo on rubber will affect the rubber industry more than the rubber industry will affect the rubber industry.
