How Well Off Are Idaho’s Minorities?

What’s in store for Puget Sound’s Steve’s View, Joe River?

That’s the question the U.S. Forest Service is asking as it considers where to locate the Steve’s View and Joe River in the Tule Lake Basin of the Nez Perce-Clearwater National Forest. The Steve’s View and Joe River are two of the largest rivers in the region, and they have been identified as potential sites for the Steve’s View and Joe River projects. The Steve’s View project is focused on developing a hydroelectric facility on the Steve’s View River, while the Joe River project is focused on developing a recreation area on the Joe River.

The Forest Service is currently in the process of gathering public input on the projects. The agency is holding public meetings and accepting comments from the public. The agency is also conducting environmental assessments of both projects to evaluate their potential impacts on the environment.

The Steve’s View and Joe River projects are part of the larger effort by the Forest Service to increase the region’s renewable energy supply and provide recreational opportunities for the local community.

In addition to the Steve’s View and Joe River projects, the Forest Service is also considering other projects in the region, including the Steve’s View and Joe River projects.

Two Idaho administrators die over weekend

Carlton Iiams

Dr. Carlton Iiams, Alumni's chairman of the department of foreign languages at the University of Idaho, died suddenly at his home last Friday morning. He was 61.

Dr. Iiams came to the University of Idaho as chairman of the department of foreign languages in 1961, and was appointed chairman of the department when the University of Idaho campus was established. He continued in this position until his retirement last year. Dr. Iiams also served as chairman of the Department of Foreign Languages at the University of Idaho.

Iiams was born in Walla Walla, Washington, and received his Ph.D. from the University of Washington.

Dr. Iiams is survived by his wife, Grace, and two daughters, Leslie and Mary Jane.

The University of Idaho outdoorPainter program will present a unique multi-media display, an outdoor activities program tonight at 8 p.m. in the Berkeley Theater. This presentation will display the many activities offered on the Outdoors Program and will be shown on charge.

Several outdoor activities currently offered are: backpacking, kayaking, rafting, canoeing, cycling, camping, and are free of charge. Trip leaders are pushed each week in the program center to the student union bookstore.

Outdoor equipment is also available for outdoor trips. Kayaks, canoes, bikes, camping gear, and climbing gear can be obtained for a nominal charge. Persons interested in creating outdoor programs may develop slide presentations, or helping with instructional seminars are welcome to visit the Outdoor Program center or call extension 411.

Weekend meals at camps critiqued by dorm residents

Student opinion regarding the weekend camping of the Greek Council differs among individuals. Many students complain about the lack of increase in food costs, especially from Greek, Offbeat, and the Open Forum. One resident mealt at Wallace College was on the menu of the Greek Council. The menu of the Greek Council is long and varied, but it is quite expensive. It is difficult to eat for less, being especially expensive during the week.

Exams Set

Stuveson W. Miller, director of the Career Planning and Placement Center said that the career services office has had a large number of applications for employment. There will be a deadline for applications to take the examinations on December 19th. The deadline for taking the examinations on December 19th will be December 23rd. Dean Resigns

Dr. Rollin R. Reid has announced his resignation as dean of the University of Idaho College of Mines, effective Aug. 1, 1973, and plans to return to teaching in geology.

Reid, since 1961, joined the university faculty in 1936 and is now professor of geology, college dean, director of the Idaho Bureau of Mines and Geology and director of the Idaho Mining Research Bureau. He received his bachelor’s, master’s and doctoral degrees from the University of Washington.

In a letter to Dr. Donald W. Hartung, president of the university, Reid said, “I have always held that no one circumstance permit, one should work at things that he enjoys and I enjoy the university out of a love for teaching.”

Reid, who has also served as head of the Department of Geology and Geography, has conducted extensive geological studies, particularly in the Cascade of Atn unlikely and Sawtooth Range areas. The number of numerous mining exploration, he is the editor of the Idaho Bureau of Mines and Geology.

Hartung said he deeply regretted Reid’s decision to leave administration, noting Reid “has done a very able job and has had the full support of his faculty. We appreciated his personal concern for working to leave the presidency and we will have high regard for him as a geologist and with anticipations of the contributions he will make in teaching and research that we reluctantly agreed to release him.”

McCabe Earns Scholarship

John McCabe, a senior majoring in agriculture/chemistry and geology here, is the recipient of a $1,000 Memorial Scholarship for the academic year just beginning. This award is one of the ten made by the National Alpha Beta Foundation which annually assists outstanding undergraduate students here.

McCabe has been active in his campus community and is a member of the Idaho Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa. McCabe has also been active in his campus community and is a member of the Idaho Chapter of Alpha Beta.

Competency Not Related To Position

Professor Edwin Peck is an expert on the appreciation students hold for academic interests. In other words, students who study subjects such as drinking, planning, and other college paraphernalia, according to Dr. Peck, make good grades in their courses.

Peck made his expertise very clear last week at the Faculty Council meeting as the tenure discussion came up.

"I do not believe students have an appreciation of the material competence for which they are studying," Peck said. "What we are discussing here is a question of the tenure of a faculty member," he went on.

In other words, Professor Peck was implying that the intellectual maturity to judge whether a professor is competent in research and in the classroom.

Professor Peck has been absent for a time from the University campus. If he has looked closely at Faculty Council it probably would have disturbed him to see two students voting very competently on the council where he is not even a member.

Not every professor on this campus nor at their campuses are affiliated with Peck's point of view, but there is an idea that takes up the same flag as Peck. Correct, not every student is competent enough to judge whether a professor is competent or not, but Peck must also understand that not every professor is mature enough intellectually to stand before the other half of the student community and pretend to be a scholar.

For this reason we have a mature body of students along with competent professors to go through the garden and weed out all the dead roots and tidy up the faculty community.

There is nothing scholarly, and Peck would agree, about a small group of students who drink, play ping pong, or without扰乱 the other students side of college. But this is also an important side of campus life for professors.

There is also nothing intellectually mature, and Peck must agree, about some professors who continue to pretend to teaching their field with the same textbooks and notes without any change for the last seven years. And those same professors will take those seven-year-old texts and quote religiously word for word from them and incorporate the quotes in their seven-year-old notes.

It is this kind of professor that must go. There is nothing mature about him or her. It is only dead weight to the faculty community and more so to the student community.

Students sit through those archaic lectures and do their best of suffering. If there is anything intellectually immature about them, perhaps it is a latent reaction to these defunct professors.—GRANGER

The Increased Enrolment Myth

There isn't going to be a major increase in enrolment.

The myth of increased enrolment has been told every fall for years. The increase in enrolment was never as large as it was believed to be.

Richard Long, the bookstore manager, said the increase in enrolment was probably going to be small this year. He thought it was going to be about the size of last year.

The registrar also reported an increase in enrolment, but many students have already dropped out.

The other myth is that the increase is due to students being more interested in their studies.

This is not the case. Many students are doing the same thing they did last year, only they are doing it in a different way.

Both of these myths have been used to make students feel better about their choices of college classes. But the real truth is that many students are not interested in their studies.

There are some students who are interested, but the truth is that they are not interested in their studies.

Nonacademicies

To the Editor:

I, personally, am not an Idahoan: I am a nonacademic. I am not interested in the nonacademic, and I have never been interested in the nonacademic.

My nonacademic status is not a matter of convenience, but of necessity. I am not interested in the nonacademic, and I have never been interested in the nonacademic.

I am interested in the academic, and I have always been interested in the academic.

Pocatello is Thinking About Idaho

By Marshall Hall

Editorial

Pocatello is a city in southern Idaho, known for its university and its many outdoor recreational opportunities. The city has a rich history, with its roots dating back to the early 19th century. Today, Pocatello is home to the University of Idaho, a public research university that is the largest in the state. The university is known for its strong programs in agriculture, engineering, and education, as well as its beautiful campus.

Recently, the city has been considering the installation of a new recreational facility, the Pocatello Outdoor Sports Complex. This complex would include a variety of activities, such as soccer fields, a basketball court, and a tennis court. The complex would be located in a park area that is currently underutilized.

The city council has been discussing the project for several months, and the public has been invited to provide input on the design and location of the facility. Some residents have expressed concern about the cost of the project, while others have praised the city for its investment in recreation.

Regardless of the final decision, it is clear that Pocatello is committed to providing its residents with the best possible services and resources. The city is a great place to live, work, and play, and it continues to grow and evolve to meet the needs of its diverse population.
Broncos Trample Idaho

By Kim Grammer
Associated Sports Editor

While Boise State cheerleaders attempted to entice monotonous sports, the Boise State Bronco football team defeated an experimental Vandal squad, 42-1, before a record crowd of 37,938 on Saturday afternoon in the Boise Stadium.

The Vandals were unable to muster anything but a moderately effective running attack against the tight and versatile Boise defense. Using both of their outstanding backs, Jim Bridle and Ron McMillan, the Bronco-coached offensive line connected to runners Don Ball and Dick Donohue who impressively outmaneuvered Vandal secondary defenders before bringing in a long yardage gain.

A large-scale movement of Boise defenders and fans was on hold for the game but was suddenly called off when the Bronco offense opened the first period of play with two quick touchdowns.

Highways to heaven

The Broncos received the opening kickoff and immediately marched 60 yards in 13 plays for their first score of the game, which Kevin Hutt took in on a quarterback sneak from the Idaho two-yard line. The punt after was returned and Boise led 4-0 with just under nine minutes left in the quarter.

On Boise's second drive, running back Chester Brantley broke up the middle for a long gain but was tackled for five yards after breaking the line. He then removed the ball and was forced to turn back to look for it. By the time he got there, BSU's outstanding defensive tackle Dennis Bruns already had his hands on it and sprinted all the way to the Idaho end zone.

Boise's second TD

Suddenly was chance in the next play when Don Ball on a simple end-around pattern and was wide open for Auutele's touchdown.

The line is not the place to be when football giants crack heads.

Boise State's Ron Auutele goes back for the attack.

Idaho was buried under by the Boise State Broncos Saturday. Boise leads in the cross-state battle now.

Vandals, with spirits high, prepare to meet the Broncos.

Wrestling Is Out

Moscow — The University of Idaho has dropped wrestling from its athletic program, effective immediately, according to Ed Kraemer, University of Idaho athletic director.

Wrestling has been one of the intramural sports under way up until this past winter. The decision was made at this time to allow students to the program to transfer to other institutions and become a part of their athletic organizations.

Although the wrestling program was not as successful as the other extramurals, the decision was made based on the fact that the program was not successful and did not meet the requirements of the program.

High Spirits and Praises

By Mary Bor device

The Boise State football players were in high spirits and very complimentary after the game. They had done their best and were ready to play their best in the future.

Adams, who played for 59 minutes in the contest, admitted that he had not played well and needed to work more on his game. He added that he was looking forward to the future.

Adams was congratulating the game played at Boise State during last week's game. He played well and was given the game's most valuable player award. He added that the team did not play well and that they needed to work harder in the future.

Adams credited the Boise State offense for the impressive victory.

“Our defense was at its best,” Adams said. “It is the highest level of defense that we have played all year. We are coming together and playing well as a team."
