ASU Face Senate Term Dilemma

By Steve McCoy
Political Editor

Some wenian student leaders see- ing only half a term in office as a concern to the administration appointed by the ASU board. They believe the current administration's advocacy for Senate term limits would allow them to stay in office for only half a term. In the past, when the students voted to extend their terms beyond the normal one-year term, the administration's intervention was lacking. The current administration, however, has taken a strong stance against extending terms, arguing that it would undermine the democratic process.

New Judge Mosman: Is He a Judge at All?

by Marshall Hall

Is Moscow's controversial new District Judge the legitimate successor to the late Judge W.A. Mosman according to the statutes based for judicial appointments? In a recent interview with Judge Mosman, the former judge expressed his belief that he was the legitimate successor because he was appointed to the position by the Idaho legislature. However, the current administration has requested a new judge for the position, citing concerns about the legitimacy of the appointment process.

Idaho Studies Possibility of Medical School

BOISE — The State Board of Education (chairman of State Board of Regents) will ask the legislature for $200,000 this session to begin a feasibility study of a medical school for the state. The board voted Tuesday to request the funds after hearing a recommendation from Dr. Fred Green, president of the University of Idaho.

The goal is to establish a medical school in the state that would provide residents with access to high-quality medical education and healthcare. The board is seeking $200,000 to cover the cost of a feasibility study, which will assess the feasibility of establishing a medical school in Idaho.

BOISE—Idaho's four universities are seeking a combined $120,000,000 in funding from the legislature to meet current year budget demands. The money would be divided among the four universities: the University of Idaho, Boise State University, Idaho State University, and Lewis-Clark State College.

This funding is necessary to continue operations and maintain academic programs. The universities have already made cuts and are looking for additional funds to cover their operating expenses.

Stoddard Calls Experience a Major Campaign Issue

by Sue Schou
Argonaut Political Writer

Experience and expertise may be the key to getting there, but Hail Stoddard is running on a campaign that's a little bigger, and a little more all encompassing than just individual names, candidates, and promises.

That's why he's calling his political team a "broad based" of the program put together for the campaign, and a "well established" with both innovative and traditional strategies.

Stoddard's campaign is a "well established" blend of traditional and innovative strategies, and it's working. His name is the first name on ballots in the general election, and he's getting the kind of support that he needs to win.

Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Or., addressed himself to a wide range of policy issues Monday night, including the situation in Lebanon, the death of President Reagan, the Iran-Contra affair, and the resurgence of conservative thinking. The senator's topics included the relationship of the Senate with the White House on budget issues; the pressure for a new administration on the Senate; and hats in the Senate.

Hatfield, who has been characterized as a moderate Republican, stated that he was not sure whether the Senate would be willing to accept the priorities set by the new administration. He added that he was not sure whether the Senate would be willing to accept the priorities set by the new administration.

Although the United States already has a strong military presence in the region, the latest public opinion polls indicate that the majority of people feel that the Senate will be willing to accept the priorities set by the new administration.

Hatfield's speech was interrupted by a protestor who tried to interrupt the senator's speech.

At the end of the senator's speech, a large crowd of people gathered outside the Senate building, chanting slogans and holding signs. The protestor was later arrested by the police.

McClure's Mideast

Senator James McClure's appearance on campus yesterday in connection with Bonham Symposium activities brought him a certain amount of the limelight. McClure, you might recall, is well known in Washington covering the fast-finding junt to the Midlantic Countries. Quite a surprising trip for a freshman senator from one of the youngest districts in America.

McClure has returned from the trip with a number of constructive suggestions about the involvement of the United States in the Mideast, Democrats and Republicans alike consider a number of them feasible.

But a discussion on the Midlantic with Dr. Boyd Martin yesterday afternoon, Martin said that the North African nations are a bloc of Arab states. This explanation spread after, with little time for questioning Martin's statement.

This is not true, it’s an argument about stability. One of the aspects of Argonast's work is, but it is just an opportunity. While the Middle East is, it is not necessarily a concept in countries. It is an area of particular significance with oil and international relations. The Netherlands and the situation in the Middle East are of particular importance to the world of today.

In addition, Martin and McClure discussed the potential involvement of U.S. military strength in the Mideast areas for the purpose of getting oil. This goes hand in hand with Coal's fear of losing every thing to nationalization to the Mideast countries.

That fear is remote. Since the involvement of the Mideast in the world’s seven largest oil companies is threatened, the relations between the Mideast countries may have a military bearing with the Mideast nations. The arguments used in yesterday's discussions occasionally approached the absurd. One argument that seemed to be an attempt to get them from a Middle Eastern "expert"

Boys, we estimate that the Midlantic is twenty billion dollars in such a way that they would be above any political Hassles. Economically, they function largely inside any inter

McClure's image is already hurt by the allegations brought up among the Senate and military, and the technological events that may have affected government deals with those countries.

An argument made in a single fact that a long story, major cartels spent things in such a way that they would be above any political Hassles. Economically, they function largely inside any inter.

"It used to be a good playground game with winners and losers and bad boys and good boys," said John Tuner, who was vice president of student organizations at Idaho State University during the 1974-75 academic year. "Now it's just a game of sports where the winners are just the ones who scored the most points in the final game." The students at Idaho State University have been the primary targets of the Idaho Public Interest Research Group (IPIRG) in recent years. The group, which was formed in 1973, is a student-run organization that has been active in several campus issues, including the funding of the university's athletic programs.

Editor:

In response to a letter from a student at the Argonaut, who questioned the need for the Idaho Public Interest Research Group (IPIRG) on campus, I would like to clarify the role of IPIRG and its relationship to the Argonaut.

IPIRG is a student-run organization that is independent of the Argonaut. We do not receive any funding from the Argonaut, and we operate on a shoestring budget. We are committed to promoting student involvement in civic affairs and to holding the university accountable for its actions.

Our goal is to empower students to take an active role in their education and in the decision-making process of the university. We believe that students have a right to know the truth about campus issues and that they should be involved in shaping the future of their institution.

The Argonaut's coverage of campus issues has often been critical of IPIRG, and we believe that this coverage has been unfair. We would like to see the Argonaut provide a more balanced and accurate portrayal of IPIRG and its activities.

We encourage students to read the Argonaut and to participate in our activities. IPIRG is here to serve the students, and we welcome your suggestions and criticisms.

Swimmers Swing Into Action

The University of Idaho swim team was "bowled over" at Idaho State last week when the Vandals lost to the Bengals 157-109.

The Vandals' basketball team went to the University of Montana this week to play against the Grizzlies. The Vandals were expected to lose, but they surprised everyone with a victory over the Grizzlies.

During this match, the Vandals showed great teamwork and won by a score of 157-109. This win was significant for the Vandals, as it helped them improve their overall record for the season.

The Vandals are now 2-1 in conference play and 3-2 overall. They are hoping for more wins in the upcoming matches against other top teams.
