SEND campaign kicks off

Organizers of the Scholarship Endowment National Day of Service have been working hard to ensure that all students attending the Spokane campus understand the importance of the campaign and its goals. National Day of Service is a national effort to have students work together to create positive change in their communities. Spokane, the largest campus of the University of Washington, is participating in this effort, and President John M. Petersen is encouraging all students to participate. The event is set for Thursday, March 15, and will involve students working on various service projects throughout the day.

The event is part of a larger effort to increase awareness about the importance of giving back to the community and to demonstrate the impact that the University of Washington can have on the world. The campaign is focused on promoting the importance of giving back to the community and encouraging students to get involved in community service projects.

No paper no classes

Students are not unusual to see around campus because many of them are working full-time jobs. The number of students working is on the rise, and it is expected to increase even more in the future.

The reason, according to Plant Manager Ed Smith, is that many students are living on campus and need a way to pay for their education. Many students are also working to save money for their future.

The University of Washington is committed to helping students who are facing financial difficulties. The university offers a variety of programs and resources to support students, including scholarships, grants, and loans.

New diplomas debated

by SCOTT REYES

The bicentennial diploma is becoming a hot issue among the students of the University of Idaho.

The University of Idaho is planning to introduce a bicentennial diploma as early as next fall.

Before anyone figures out the loopholes in the U of I financial system, the legislature and Board of Regents will have the U of I budget wrangled down to nothing. In the meantime, the administration is absorbing all the slashing like some sooth-sayer reading bones to see what the students want.

As a result of Venrick's inability to mobilize student support, the legislature has commissioned an unrelated study on the dining and kitchen facility at Wallace Complex. Gumi Hall cutbacks will be priced for $50,000 - a saving in labor costs annually, according to Mr. Tom Richardson, U of I vice president for administrative services.

Moreover, rents for more dormitory rooms occupied by two students would go from $535 to $594 annually per student. If four students rent the rooms next year, rent for married student apartments would increase 10 per month for all units.

As if these proposed increases aren't enough, a proposal has also been made by Dean Vettrum to increase food prices in the SUB cafeteria and snack bar.

According to Mr. W. R. Niefert, "Students would prefer a cutback in services rather than a price increase." This may be true but the immediate result of the proposed increase will be an increase in the already exorbitant cost of living availability.

What this all indicates is the indispensable need for students to unite, mobilize outside of the ASUI, and lobby for fee increases whatever. It must be done now if we are to live in all the previously cited areas.

To the student body, our student activity is accomlished, U of I students could go to the legislature themselves and express their views. Maybe a little of that revolutionary fervor of the '60s.

College students across the country have failed to rally against increased fees and are now paying the price. The same thing will happen if the U of I students put their heads down and continue to be ignored. However, if the student body, the faculty status will remain stagnant and academic commitments will deteriorate.

So write your legislature in Boise, sign petitions, and if necessary, have the bonds proposal considered and defeated. Do anything, but don't put your hopes on our student government because you know how stupid they are.

Price increase not fair

Editor:

This letter is in response to Dean Venrick and David Wann's column, "What We Want."

The column argues that the only alternatives to the increase in fees are: (1) higher student fees, (2) lower student fees or (3) to leave the options of lower and higher student fees.

I think that this column clearly demonstrates that the students of the University of Idaho are being exploited and that a more direct method of action is needed to alleviate the problem.

I believe that the administration is attempting to shift the blame for the current financial situation from the administration to the students by proposing that the students bear the brunt of the financial burden.

The students of the University of Idaho have no say in the decision to raise fees and are therefore being exploited.

I would like to see a more direct method of action taken to alleviate the problem, such as a student protest or a strike.

Phosphates in Idaho's future

The Idaho Student Association (ISA) executive director, Jeff Hecht, has recently disclosed an increase in the number of students who will have the opportunity to go to college. The ISA is working towards eliminating fees and ensuring that all students have access to higher education.

Major issues in the capital include: federal-tribal relations, the future of higher education, and the Southern Government's report on the future of the state. The Landlord-Tenant Relations Bill has been introduced in the legislature and is expected to be debated soon.

The university's administration is considering a budget increase to cover the higher costs of education. The increase will help to cover the costs of student services and support faculty salaries.

The governor's budget recommendation to the legislature is to increase funding for education by $3.5 million. The governor's proposal will be discussed in the legislature and is expected to receive a vote in the near future.

Concerning agriculture activities, the ACF-CID has submitted its proposal to the legislature. The proposal includes funding for agricultural research and development.

The cloudy pursuit of recycling problems and providing them free, they are shipped to Spokane. "We are paid $2 per ton, but after shipping costs, the money on the truck and gasoline, the city makes about $6 to $8 per ton," said the manager.

The city makes, however, a profit on the waste money itself, according to Morrey. They are shipped to Walla Walla at $2 per ton but get back on the average of $5 per ton to handle. This extra cut pays for shipping the tin to a broker in the state who then ships it out to Japan to be recycled.

Paper and the other recyclable materials are not collected consistently, Morrey said. The city looks at the center revenue $2 per ton delivered to the center. After shipping and labor, they average about $1.20 per ton. With computer chips, however, the profit is much larger. The computer center in the University of Idaho dreams all used computer chips to the center. They remove the circuit boards, sell them to the chip company, and the center makes $13.00 per ton on the computer center, 60 percent of which goes to the company center.

Aluminum cans bring the center more of its profit. There is no curbing and handling costs, due to the arrangement of the container, which can be readily recycled. The center receives $13.00 per ton for the cans, and 50 percent of which goes to the company center.

Aluminum cans bring $300 per ton of the average.

"This is what we encourage people to bring in it is," said Morrey. They don't need to be washed, cleaned or crushed and we can make a reasonable profit on them.

The city is concerned about the center's problems for which Moscow's solid waste budget. The city can only expect to contain $300,000 a year in similar and deposit over 7,500 tons of garbage.

Morrey's conservative estimation of the system that is currently in place is that it is costing the city around $20 per ton of garbage. From the city, we could minimize costs by selling waste by one third.

What can I do to help?

Part of the solution is with the citizens of the community. The center needs regular donations of material such as newspapers and cans. For the public there is the small center where garbage can be sorted and deposited. The center needs the most in aluminum cans. According to Morrey, this is the one material where the center can make a sizable profit without losing too ship for the center. The next is paper, sorted out by color and delivered to the center. Paper represents a large amount of the materials donated to the center.

"This includes absolutely any kind of paper, even cardboard," said Morrey.

Morrey also commented that the center is willing to pick up garbage from businesses and different places but will need people willing to accept it.

Set cans, such as beverage and soup cans, can also be recycled through the center. These should be cleaned and the labels removed before running them in to the center.

All is what the center needs is public support and awareness of the need for recycling development. It is estimated that we have about a 50 year supply of raw materials in this country. A large part of the materials are recycled we can preserve and change the life of materials that we have. The former paper that we recycled, the solid waste the company center, the cans.

This line of thinking applies to the idea of the garbage that is being away properly. In the city, it is mostly the private citizen who does not recycle. The garbage that is the most in is the摆在 plastic. This is a large problem in the center instead of Heavy Trash Bags.

A Moscow Recycling Center employee deposits aluminum cans into one of the several bins located on Jackson Street.

Sources of sorted waste all behind the center until they are shipped for recycling.
