Ages and Grades

There are a few in the average college student, but between them and the rank-and-file of the population there is a difference that is as great as there is one between a college student and the average person of the community.

The fact is that these college students are the most interesting people on the planet. They are the ones who are really doing something, who are really making a difference. They are the ones who are really living. And they are the ones who are really worth our time and attention.

The problem is that we don't spend enough time with college students. We don't spend enough time listening to their stories, learning from their experiences, and getting to know them as individuals.

But we can change that. We can start by making a conscious effort to connect with college students. We can start by having conversations with them, asking them about their lives, and really listening to what they have to say.

These conversations don't have to be long or complicated. They can be simple and straightforward. All we have to do is be open and willing to learn.

And once we start doing that, we'll see that there is a whole other world out there, a whole other perspective, a whole other way of looking at things. We'll see that there is more to life than just the things we've been told or the things we've been taught.

We'll see that life is not just about getting good grades or getting into the right school. Life is about making connections, about learning from others, about growing and changing.

So let's start making those connections. Let's start having those conversations. Let's start really getting to know these college students. And let's do it today.

How do you connect with college students? How do you have those conversations? Let us know in the comments below.
