A pencil put Peary on top of the world
O ther employees had great personal courage, indomitable energy and devotion unexcelled, but Peary had one thing more.
He had the group of every detail —not so much the men who guided the sled in his front-ramped lead, although each one's mark he calculated a methodical course to make sure of the next day's progress to the Pole.
To be sure, each day's reckoning of the progress was the most important of all days in his estimate of man in the long-distance industry. That viewpoint, expressed in the varied terms of applied science, laboratory research, financing and management, guides Bell System men in their respective fields of public service.
