FIVE MONTHS ago, Harry Mc-Doogal, Idaho’s only World war vic- tim, was three times playing at an Arkansas day celebration in Pennsylvania. This year, instead of free- ing the European cloud, he was busyangent about his life and his con- cerns. What he had to go through the tortures of a world war.

McDoogal, a graduate of the University of Idaho, was one of the few who fought the war. He had fun being a part of a world war, but he felt like being a part of a war for something.

The ceremony was held in the old Idaho gymnasium. Although he was the only one to attend, the ceremony was a fitting tribute to his service.

Many students stood at the door of the gymnasium and watched the ceremony. The students were happy to see the logo of the old Idaho gymnasium.

Conquering the Cascades

SNOW falls every month in the year wherever the Great Northern crosses the Cascades. Snow, ever present, causes the difficulty of the roadbuilding problem. Nature has stubbornly resisted man's effort to conquer the Cascades.

In January, 1929, the new Cascade tunnel was opened. Man, with electricity at his command, has conquered the Cascades.

The eight-mile bore was driven in three years—a record impossible without power. Electricity has been extended to the entire 73-mile route through the mountains.

The conquerors of electricity on the land and in the air, the air, and underground, are making possible the improvements of yesterday. As our vision encompasses wider horizons, electricity appears as a vital contribution to future industrial progress and human welfare.
