Paper is Read Before Engineers

Metals millions of dollars for millions of dollars of ore, but how do they do it? This question was asked by a group of engineers at the meeting of the American Institute of Mining Engineers, held in Chicago last week.

The raw materials are purchased from the mining companies, who in turn are under contract to supply the ore. The ore is then sent to the mills, where it is crushed and roasted.

The power of the mills is immense, and the work of the engineers is not easy. They must have a complete understanding of the processes involved in mining and milling, and must be able to judge the quality of the ore.
