Trelawny of the Wells
Scores Both Nights

By Niles Varian

"Trelawny of the Wells" was presented by the university players under the direction of Prof. Henry W. Fullerton last Friday and Saturday night. The production was a success, attracting not less than 200 people to each of the performances. The play is a study of the life of a French peasant, and the acting was excellent. The play was repeated on Saturday night.

The Wells was enjoyed by the audience and was well received by the critics. The acting was excellent, and the play was well produced. The audience was thoroughly entertained and enjoyed the performance.

Not A Cry For Help—Cooperation

Next Saturday night a new type of entertainment will be presented to the students of the University of Idaho—a combination of sports, music, and dancing.

The lettermen are fast gaining the reputation as a really first-class group and through their efforts that the "Reptis' 200" theme was enforced and carried out last fall during Homecoming. If there was a man that really thought there were any raising of a beard hazardous.

Now the club is taking up the task of staging a new type of entertainment for university students. A Sports, Dance, and Sportive, absolutely new, and presented at a time when the campus will be bums to many high school students—when would a better time for a carnival? The carnival will not only enlighten high school students, but it will bring sports to the eyes of university students who may never enter the gymnasium only when some particular event is taking place.

The carnival and dance will not only provide entertainment for the school boys and girls, but it will instill in their minds a bit of advertising that will be taken home to parents, who really tell John and Mary that they will do the best for them if they will do well in school. The well impressed high school student is worth more than thousands of advocates to university advertisements that may send out in a course of a year.

The lettermen are undertaking a tremendous task in presenting the carnival, but one important item that they cannot control is support and cooperation by members of the student body. These high school boys many of them will be visiting the university for the first time, and it is to the student body that they are at home and that they are shown a good time.

It will be admitted by the majority of students that the ballet is one of the most appropriate and the most method of displaying appreciation is cooperation. The "I' club cannot do it all.

A New Deal for Men!

Town Clad

A Penney Achievement in Fine Clothes

$19.75

Here's the Inside Story...

We asked hundreds of smart young men across the country how they dealt with the high prices of men's clothing. What did they do when they couldn't afford to buy the clothes they wanted? How did they stay warm and dry when they couldn't afford to buy the best material? And most importantly, how did they look good in their clothes?

The answers were surprising. Many of the young men reported that they bought cheaper materials and looked good in them. Some even reported that they bought clothes that were too large and had to be altered. But the most common answer was that they bought clothes that were too small and had to be altered.

The results were astounding. Many of the young men reported that they looked good in their clothes and were able to afford to buy good materials. Some even reported that they looked so good that they were offered jobs by the stores.

In fact, the results were so good that the stores began to offer special deals to the young men. They offered to alter the clothes for free if the young men bought them. And they offered to sell the clothes at a discount if the young men bought them in bulk.

The results were so successful that the stores began to offer the deals to all of their customers. And the prices dropped even further. Today, you can find high-quality clothes for a fraction of the price.

A great selection of Danbury watches can be found in the stores in the country—offered in a variety of styles, colors and price ranges.
