Veterans remember

By SHARI IRETON
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho and the community of Moscow held a Pearl Harbor Commemoration, and presented a medal to a Moscow veteran.

Jim Agidius was presented with a medal by Moscow's mayor during the event Saturday. Agidius said he remembers December 7 in Pearl Harbor to be quite a "lively" day. The raid, which took place 50 years ago Saturday, claimed the lives of more than 3,600 Americans.

"I thank Congress and the Navy Department for remembering us," said Agidius who was aboard the USS Honolulu at the time of the attack. He recalled having a Japanese bomber fly so close to him, he could see the goggles on the pilot.

Other members of the community also came to remember the event which shocked the nation and instigated the United States' entry into WWII.

While veterans relived the memories of the attack, others remembered the feelings felt on the homefront.

"Everybody on the West Coast shared feelings of fear and vulnerability praised," said Bruce Wellenbarg, director of the Campus Christian Center.

Dr. Katherine Allen, Assistant Professor of History, told how her father, who was in a ROTC unit at Washington State College, was called out to protect the Moscow-Pullman airport from attack. While this may sound ridiculous to today's generation, the attack brought on a period of panic in the continental U.S.

"Victory" was the word of the day and the government took pains to control, ration, and regulate everything. They told butchers how to cut meat, banned sliced bread, limited ice cream to eight flavors and showed to six colors. To reduce material waste, skirt lengths went up along with the taxes. Over five million women went to work, joined with African Americans, elderly, homeless and children.

Fall semester '91: A look back

By SHARI IRETON
Staff Writer

The fall of 1991 has brought many memories to the students at the University of Idaho, and here is a re-cap of the big events.

UI students began the semester in chaos, after news of a "lynching" at the university had spread around the country. Because Moscow is so close to the Aryan Nations compound, located 90 miles to the north, officials of the community reported their findings as such. However, Sharon Andrew Akhavan's tragic death was later confirmed as a suicide, but students still felt the impact from the fears of racism.

Students also returned to a problem the university had been facing for years...bad water. The residence halls, Wallace Cafeteria and most other campus buildings were all under boil orders. Due to mineral build-up allowing bacteria to enter the system, residence hall students were forced to purchase water from the grocery stores, or simply go without.

"Looking for a home? If you were an incoming student asking that question, you had a lot of work and frustration ahead of you. Off-campus housing at UI has always been tight, but this year it squeezed their wallets and living standards to death.

"If you have a lot of money, you'll be okay...but if you don't have $500 - $700 to put down up front, it's too late," said former ASUI President Mike Cort in a past Argonaut article.

Although such programs as Make Room have begun and construction for new apartments has started, there is still a long way to go.

It's strange to think of a person becoming accustomed to the sound of jackhammers, back-ho's and shouting construction men, but students who study in the UI library certainly did. The construction on the library began on 1993. The project will cost $12.3 million and add an additional 66,000 square feet to the original structure.

The most tragic and probably most controversial event to happen this fall semester was the Zephyr Apartment Fire in September. The tenants of the apartments were left temporarily homeless and permanently lost thousands of dollars of their personal belongings. However, friends provided shelter for the tenants and various groups provided financial assistance, such as the ASUI Senate, who provided up to $500 for every victim. The event has led to heated arguments between tenants and landlords about building conditions and renter's insurance.

Do student evaluations work?

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

As the end of the semester approaches, many students are being asked to fill out teacher evaluations stating their opinion of both the class and the instructor.

Many students aren't aware of the process that goes on once the evaluations are completed. According to Brink Hall Faculty Secretary Arla Macouzet, all completed teacher evaluations first find their way to her office. She said that evaluations are then sent to different places depending on whether an answer sheet was present for that particular set of evaluations.

"The evaluations which have an answer sheet included are processed primarily by Doyle Treadaway, the information director of the Letters and Science department. The written part of the evaluations are sent to the instructors themselves," said Macouzet.

Anderegg agreed with much of what Macouzet said, but he added that instructors usually send a copy to the dean of that department. He also added that department chairmen usually review evaluations with professors.

"Evaluations are a very important part of the annual review of faculty performance as well as tenure and promotion considerations," said Anderegg.

There seems to be a gap, however, between how seriously instructors take evaluations and how seriously students take them.

David Morris, a junior majoring in political science, commented on how effective the evaluations really are for students.

"I think instructors take them seriously, but the students don't put very much input into them," said Morris.

Sara Faik, a sophomore majoring in psychology, agreed with Morris on the evaluations.

"I try to take the time to fill them out, but I don't know if they do any good because most people don't seem to take the time to fill them out," said Faik.

University of Idaho professors and department heads, however, seem to take them very seriously.

UI chemistry professor Leszek Czuchajowski voiced the opinion of many teachers by supporting the role that evaluations play in reviewing teacher performance.

"Evaluations are very important for an instructor because student opinion is usually correct. My hope is that students realize how important evaluations are in reviewing teachers," said Czuchajowski.

Richard Heitmacher, the interim department head of bacteriology and biochemistry, concurred with Czuchajowski.

"We have been acting head of this department for only 18 months, but I have taken my experiences as a teacher that student evaluations are taken very seriously by both department heads and teachers," said Heitmacher.

Ryan Cameron, a junior majoring in electrical engineering, said that the problem with evaluations is that they don't affect the students who fill them out.

For more Americans, the memories of Pearl Harbor are tucked away in the back of their minds, and for our generation, we have no recollection of the event at all. Japan is the nation that sells us cars and TV's, and we seem to have put the frightful past behind us.

American Indians are the smallest of the minority groups, both in sheer numbers and in the percentage of engineering degrees held, earning less than one percent of the engineering degrees each year. American Indian Science and Engineering Society, AISES, was developed to improve this percentage and a student chapter of AISES recently received a national charter at this campus.

The society, based in Boulder, Colo., has 2,000 members in 60 chapters around the country and operates with a $1.7 million non-profit, education-oriented budget.

AISES was developed to significantly increase the number of American Indian scientists and engineers in the nation and to develop technologically informed leaders within the Indian community.

On November 7-10, students Marty Wheaton, Elizabeth Walk er and Caroline Kuykendell attended the 13th Annual National Conference in Albuquerque, New Mex ico, sponsored by Digital Equipment, Sandia National Laboratories, ATT and Bell Labs.

The focal point of the conference was a career fair in which over 600 corporations, universities and government agencies provided networking and recruitment of Native American students. It combined American Indian religion, legends, and new technology, providing a link between Indian culture, science fields and the future of the earth. "They come here and see role models," said society chairman Dwight Gourneau, noting that while there are an estimated 2,000 American Indian scientists, as few as 200 new ones join the field each year. AISES is trying to overcome the inherent problems that discourage American Indians such as the lack of role models, the isolation of reservations, lack of educational opportunities, and alcoholism.

Fred Begay, a Navajo Indian and famous nuclear physicist, delivered a keynote address at the conference illustrating how natural science underlies the Indian culture. He suggested that Indian and oriental culture may breach the next frontiers in science because of the strong influence that natural science has played in their cultures.

"Indians can make a major contribution to revitalizing the environmentally stressed earth," said Begay. "In plants, animals, sea life are treated not as our relatives, our brothers and sisters and we live in harmony with them."

"Native Americans view the world differently," said Debra LaFontaine, director of AISES. "Everything is connected, integrated. We need to understand how things affect the seventh generation."

Rather than worry at the short-term profits and impacts, Indians want to consider how decisions affect the people seven generations from now.

Interest in engineering and science is on the rise, LaFontaine said.

"What we are beginning to understand is that Indians have a lot of natural resources on our reservations. These need to be managed," he added.

Engineers and scientists are needed to manage power st ations, oil rigs, forest industries, and electronic companies that locate on Indian reservations. And the tribes prefer to hire their own members, people who understand their way of life, instead of incorporating outsiders.

Our local chapter of AISES is currently seeking new members. They have current plans to work with the area high schools in the advancement of AISES and will be sending two members to the annual leadership conference in the spring. Their next meeting is scheduled for next semester and they work out of the Native American Center in UCC 22.

If you are interested in being a member of AISES please contact Marty Wheaton at 885-8845, Brian Ahabsapahoot at 883-3131, or Dean Ernie Abele at 885-6441.

Day Care assistance provided

By Wendy Deal
Staff Writer

The University is becoming more aware of the fact that non-traditional students need just as much support as the traditional college student. The ASUJ now sponsors a Day Care Scholarship program for full time students who are also parents. Students wishing to qualify for the Day Care scholarship must be full time students and have already qualified for financial aid through the university. Law students and students receiving a full ride scholarship are not eligible for the program. The ECLC (Early Childhood Learning Center) along with the Financial Aid office must receive an application for the scholarship. Recipients are determined by the amount of financial aid they receive already, the number of children they have and the children’s ages. Most of the children will be cared for at ECLC, the Day Care center on campus, but if ECLC is full the university will award money to another Day Care center providing they are licensed and registered with Mary Spiva at the SAS office. Money is given out at the beginning of each semester. Guidelines were made up regarding the age and number of children for the purpose of determining the amount of money a family should receive. Single parents are treated the same as a couple when determining day care funds. More money is given to parents with children between the ages of one and three because they require more care and supervision. The faculty to child ratio is one to three in this age group, whereas with the older children less faculty are needed.

ISL fights for student needs

By LANE GRACIANO
Staff Writer

Every month, a group of students from four Idaho colleges meet to discuss issues that are important to the average university student and to get their voice heard at the state level. This group of students form the Idaho Student Lobby (ISL).

The ISL consists of 10 students from four member institutions across the state: Lewis-Clark State College, North Idaho College, Idaho State University and the University of Idaho.

The way the group works, two students from each member institution represent their college/university in the ISL and then in turn collectively represent all Idaho university students at the State Board of Education.

Usually, ISL delegates are the student government president and a senator, as they are presently—Amy Anderson and Allison Lindholm. However, anyone interested in being the voice of the student in front of the State Board of Education may apply to be an ISL delegate. ASU Senator Charles D’Alessio heads the group as its executive director and chairman of the board.

The group meets every month in conjunction with State Board meetings and votes on issues that come before the Board. A professional lobbyist, Vicki Patterson, then works for the group in front of the Board. Each member institution pays the ISL 25 cents per full-time equivalent student in its enrollment, and the group in turn uses the bulk of those funds to hire lobbyists like Patterson.

Issues dealt with at ISL meetings must have passed votes at the student senate level. The three issues being brought at the next ISL meeting in late January are pre-paid tuition, state-wide student insurance and opposition to the one percent initiative. Patterson will also present a fourth issue to the State Board: the appointment by the governor of a student representative to the Board to voice the interests of all Idaho schools.

“It doesn’t matter what school you’re from,” said D’Alessio. “All students have certain interests in common; like making sure tuition and other fees don’t rise too high.”

“Each individual university is trying to get more money, to get a bigger share of the pie. The ISL wants to make the pie bigger.”

Presently in its second year of existence since it fell apart in the 1970s, the group has so far successfully lobbied for minority scholarships and anti-hazing legislation. Pre-paid tuition failed by one vote last year, but D’Alessio is confident that it will pass this year.

“A lot of students in government are skeptical about the ISL,” he said. “They expect quantity of work. But what is important is the quality of the bills—it doesn’t matter how much you do, it’s what you try to achieve.”

needed.

The scholarship operates on a scale. The parents are awarded so much money for the first child, then fifty percent of the original sum for each additional child. Monthly support for a full day is $75 for an infant, $70 for a toddler, $60 for a preschool child, $40 for Kindercare and $30 for afterschool.

The university awarded $10,000 to be divided up for the Day Care Scholarship. Approximately $7,000 is going to those 31 students already using ECLC who are in financial need. The remaining $3,000 is available to those on the ECLC waiting list to use for off-campus day care services, if those students have applied for financial aid and have met the above requirements. A list of 25 new recipients was submitted yesterday.

Kathleen Pullmann, Director of the Child Care Center, said she didn’t know if the scholarship would be renewed. She also commented that, “It’s nice to see the university recognizing the nontraditional student.”

Wake up, Liz, parking is a problem

I realize that life holds no promises for fair and equal treatment, and there's no law against getting "taken" by businesses, but I expect more than that from my school. I mean, if you buy a plot of land and find out that dozens of other people bought the same plot, (which turns out to be in the middle of the women's restroom at 2pm) the law's on your side, right? Wrong.

Each year this university administration sells parking passes out at a healthy 4 passes per space. That means that on any given day, 4 other people, (so as a parking official tells me) plus those without passes, are out for your spot, buddy, and there's nothing you can do about it. You can ask the parking people to tow away cars without passes, but they won't do it. You can call the police or administration or even your parents and complain, but it won't help.

I've come upon a decision to solve this little problem. As a student I pay more money than this school is worth to attend, and my parents (and yours) pick up the rest of the budget through their taxes, so I'm going to be a VIP from now on.

I mean, if a woman from back East (who's done little more than lie to officials, give $1500 Football Alumni branch, and get a housekeeper along with her $100,000 salary) has a reserved parking spot, why can't I, A PAYING CUSTOMER, have my own spot, too?

Maybe if we just went around and took down all those little reserved signs made gold stickers non-existent, maybe then some changes would get made. I'd love to see our dear queen Liz (perhaps up for a role on the new Dynasty reunion) push her flashy pumps and gams through six inches of mud as she walks two blocks to get to work. Or better yet, I'd love to see Liz walk to work or ride a bike everyday - maybe the increased activity would wake her from dormancy.

At any rate, parking is atrocious, and as an apartment renter who has to pay to park in my own, I just know the University stole it away 15 years ago, I feel cheated. Now with the Post Office so close, I have to compete with federal vehicles to park within a block of my house, and they're never in danger of getting ticketed.

I know our only hope, then, is to either get jobs at the Post Office, or find a president who, unlike ours, comes equipped to actually solve some problems and work out solutions other than firing everyone. Or am I just dreaming that we get, even sometimes, what we pay for?

Taylor commentary misinformed

Editor,

I am writing in response to Doug Taylor's Commentary in the November 10 issue of Argonaut. I was amazed he would write on a subject he is either misinformed on or else knows very little about.

The correct name of the church he was using for a source is The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, not the Church of Latter Day Saints. I was shocked that he would leave out the most important part of the name of our church.

Just like Mr. Taylor mentioned, we are one of various religions that send missionaries out. In fact, one of our church's three main missions is to Proclaim the Gospel. This is the same command that Jesus Christ gave to his apostles. Hence, this is done by no means the same as the representation given in Mr. Taylor's commentary. We believe in a principle called free agency which allows a person to choose for themselves if they believe and to what extent they believe the doctrines the missionaries may put forth to them. There is no force or deception used of any kind. Our purpose is to share with others what is very dear to our hearts and whether or not they choose to investigate further is totally up to the individual.

Kennedy and Thomas trials wrong women

So, the big spectator sport this week again is watching the proceedings of some national wrestling match of the sexes or other - the case of the William Kennedy Smith rape. What in the hell is this anyway? First we have Anita Hill on the stand, having to describe every lurid detail of the sexual encounter with Justice Thomas. We remember her (and he described to his delight the supposed collection of semen on his penis). Now we have another woman having to describe, on national television, just exactly what happened as she was brutally raped by an acquaintance she apparently trusted.

This really is absurd. This woman is being subjected to questions about how she was raped. Things like: How did he hold both of your arms down, pin you to the floor and rape you?" She can't decide how he raped her, and she can't describe specifics.

The answer is because the Kennedys are a huge political name in America. Besides, they're rich.

Meyla Bianco

Commentary

Occasionally in these pages about the injustice, lack of respect, and injustice in the Kennedy trials, victims of sexual assault were referred to as "rape victims". This is an unfortunate and gross misnomer.

The crimes committed by William Kennedy Smith and Thomas were not rape. True, Ms. Hill was raped. But Ms. Smith was not the rapist. He was the victim of a violent assault. It is a violation of his privacy that we need to keep in mind.

It is also our duty to protect his right to his privacy. If we do not, his right to the protection of the law will be endangered. We need to remember that he is a person, not a statistic.

Time to learn about respecting others

Editor:
As a veteran teacher of eight years I'd like to give the University of Idaho and its vice president of university relations an F on public relations. I might add that the Idahoan and the local police do not rate much higher.

Distribution and public display of blatant hate literature spreads hate and racial disparity. Hate and racial disparity breeds violence. Public display of material that is meant to be offensive and threatening is taken this way can lead to a disturbance of the peace.

So what do we do when the peace is disturbed? Arrest those who are offensive and threatening, arrest those who are offended and react to the threats or get down to bases and try for an "ounce of prevention."

When we talk about not allowing hate literature, cross burning and such we are not talking about freedom of speech and the First Amendment. We are talking about common decency and common law. Let us not confuse freedom of expression with harassing and threatening others. Are we trying to say that it's wrong to threaten or harass people unless it is on a racial or religious basis and then it is covered by the First Amendment?

Why don't we all be fair, the Idahoan and the city of Moscow get together and try to make Idaho a place that is not famous for racism and bigotry but a place famous for fighting it. Actively oppose racism, take a stand against it, do something. By not allowing public displays that threaten, cause discomfort, encourage racial disparity, anger and hatred then we can start.

Responsibility will limit alcohol incidents

Editor:
I am writing in response to the editorial of Nov. 22, "University and do-gooders should not run our lives."

Mr. Gatewood sees no connection between recent deaths and beer chugging. So his juvenile hit-and-run editor, style does not surprise me. Name calling and slanderous expressions do nothing to support Gatewood's argument. It only shows that he is out of touch.

Prohibition is not the issue. Responsibility is. As chief Do-gooder, I support the right of anyone who is of legal age to go into any establishment and drink. But along with that right comes responsibility. That right should not infringe upon the rights of others.

Mr. Gatewood did make one sad but correct statement, "those students are dead because of behavior." But what about nine year old Jake McCarr Jr. who was killed by a UI student who had been drinking and had gotten behind the wheel. Did Jake's own irresponsible behavior kill him? No, someone else's did. That is why we have to draw the line at activities that promote irresponsible consumption of alcohol.

As individuals, we have a duty to ALCOHOL. Let's show it.

Horoscope section offensive

Editor:
In the Horoscope section of the December 3, 1991 Argonaut I found much to be offended by. Who is this Madame Paulson anyway? and what does the D.D.S. stand for? Maybe Definedly Deranged Someone. In five out of twelve of her horoscopes she encouraged others to "get wasted" or "make babies". What kind of nonsense does this woman have to urge excessive drinking and haphazard sex? With the AIDS Education week currently upon us and the red ribbons of Drug and Alcohol Awareness Week still flying, she has the nerve to condone the unacceptable.

I'm not one to look down my nose at all society. I'm always up for a good laugh but this woman definitely stepped over the line into offensiveness and poor taste.

The horoscope section is a traditional and popular section of any newspaper. Most of the ones I've read have been general or clever, but nothing like this. I'd take extremely dull over this offensiveness. -Susan Hole Hole

Proven or not, there are things in this world that defy explanation by logical means. Whether this incident was in fact truly a sighting cannot be said, but the possibilities that it may have been cannot be denied. It takes a balance of an open mind and skepticism to learn in life.

-Sherri L. Kopel

Horoscope by Karin and Kim very offensive

Editor;
I would like to comment about the response 'Karin and Kim' gave in the November 22 issue of the Argonaut to the reader who claimed to have seen an UFO.

Whether UFO's exist or not I cannot say, but the treatment given to the querist was insulting. I realize that bluntness and sarcasm is the style of their feature, but assuming that the writer was on drugs is very offensive.

Are heaven and hell mythical places?

Editor;
The question is an old one. In the Nov. Argonaut, a letter writer noted that no one knows where heaven or hell are located. An implied conclusion suggested that since heaven and hell lack tangible attributes (such as a geographic location), then they must be mythical places.

The paragraphs below illustrate subjective, intangible entities that occur within the realm of human experience.

The essence of human thought is not embodied in visible traits. No one has observed the color of an idea. What is the height and width of an artist's imagination? No one knows, but most people agree that they can understand human minds and understand that human minds are not metaphorical items even though intellect has no tangible appearance.

What are the chemical components of hate? How much love can you pack into a pint canning jar? No physical parameters exist that can be used to describe a handful of compasionate, but rational human beings perceive the existence of emotions. Laws are distinct entities that can not be defined on the basis of material properties, but they exist. We cannot see whether a law is solid, liquid or gas at room temperature. Yet when a society respects and enforces them, laws generate governmental power directly affecting the physical aspect of human lives.

Men and women perceive the existence of things that have no visible material features. When the Bible-scribes presupposed literal, physical manifestations of non-material matters, they base their beliefs on a false premise and interpret the resulting absence of information as non-existence. This misconception makes it impossible to understand the reality contained in the Bible.

So, searching for heaven or hell in the physical realm is one of the erroneous tactics used by the local anti-Bible막s.

Heaven and hell letter appeared pointless

Editor; Tony Goss (setter, Dec. 3) called my letter on Heaven and Hell pointless. This is partly correct because the editor cut out -censored- parts of my letter so as to make it appear pointless, although it was shorter than Mr. Goss' criticism of it.

In the Old Testament religion there was no life after death; there was no heaven and hell. The only one who died was your son and so the only way God could punish or reward you was while you were alive. If God were angry with you when you died, he would punish your children and grandchildren. Mr. Goss says this is not in the Bible. If he would open it up and read the Ten Commandments, he will see that God said, "...for the LORD your God am a jealous God, punishing children for the iniquity of parents, to the third and the fourth generation of those who reject me." (Exodus 20:5) This theme is repeated throughout the Old Testament and again is found in Deutero-Deuteronomy 25, one of the most important chapters in it.

For many centuries this was the old time religion of the Hebrews. But during the Exile in Babylon, 587-538 B.C.E. the Hebrew priests thought this was such a good idea that they adopted it into their own religion. Later, Heaven and Hell also became part of the Christian and Muslim religions.

Science does not deal with concepts for which there is no evidence. If Mr. Goss thinks it is easy to prove that Heaven and Hell exist, it is up to him to do so. The onus of proof is on him who alleges, not the questioner. Centuries ago, when nearly everybody believed that the earth was flat, it was easy to convince people that Heaven was up above the blue dome of sky and Hell was down below, but to do these no evidence of it. It also seemed more just: now God could punish you after you died and deal with your children and grandchildren on their own merits. Read the Bible again, Mr. Goss.

Exercise a good way to cure wintertime blues

BY KIM MARTINELL, HUNT Student Health Center

As the thermometer drops, so do many people’s motivations to follow a regular exercise routine. Some folks find that it is too cold to go outdoors or they just simply do not have time for exercise. They are limited because they’re too old, too young, too fat. No one has a suitable exercise companion. Many people feel that they are too out of shape to exercise (what if someone sees me?), find it boring, too hard, or unattractive.

These people are missing out on one of the greatest strategies exercise and health nuts use to maintain a better lifestyle. Those “exercise nuts” have a marked decrease in overall mortality compared to sedentary people. Exercise can be especially effective in decreasing heart and lung disease, decreasing high cholesterol, hypertension, obesity, non-insulin-dependent diabetes, and osteoporosis. Improved psychological well-being is an added bonus.

Those who exercise regularly may view winter as a more pleasant time of the year than non-exercisers. Exercisers have the ability to produce five times more body heat than non-exercisers. People who are feeling more cold, active people have the ability to produce off colds, flu and other viruses better because of higher immunity.

During exercise, the body releases endorphins which are the body’s own natural morphine. Endorphins reduce stress and depression, lower your set point, hill pain, and increase your mental well-being.

With regular exercise, you not only remarkably improve your mental health and self esteem, but will experience an improvement in your skin tone and sleeping patterns.

With progressive physical activity you can improve your body shape and decrease body fat by lowering your set point and improving your body’s ability to more efficiently metabolize food. You can increase your metabolism by three to eight times for one to two days after each exercise session. In addition to building muscular strength, you will increase fat-burning muscle, strengthen your bones, and increase your flexibility.

Winter can be a great time to begin a weight loss program because it takes more calories to warm the body than to cool it. The following is a list of average caloric expenditure for various winter activities:

- Activity — CALS/Minute
  - Basketball — 7.5
  - Dancing — 10
  - Hockey, ice — 10
  - Pool (billiards) — 2
  - Racquetball — 6
  - Running (7 min/mile) — 12
  - Skating, ice (9 mph) — 6
  - Skiing, cross-country — 10
  - Skiing, downhill — 8
  - Swimming (60 yards/min) — 12
  - Volleyball (moderate) — 5
  - Walking (15 min/mile) — 6
  - Weight training — 7.5

Continuous or sustained training for improvement of cardiovascular endurance involves selecting an activity that is aerobic in nature, and training at least 3 times per week for a time period of no less than 20 minutes with the heart rate elevated from 65 to 80 percent of maximal rate.

To figure your target heart rate zone, estimate your maximum heart rate by subtracting your age from 220. Then take 65 and 80 percent of that number to determine what you exercise training zone is — it is between these two numbers. Finally, compare these numbers with your actual heart rate, which you can measure by taking your pulse. Press lightly with your index finger at your neck (carotid artery) or your wrist (radial artery), count the beats for 10 seconds, and multiply by 6 to get your heart rate per minute.

As the intensity of your workout increases so does the risk of injury, so if you are to new to you or you have physical limitations, start slowly and allow yourself at least four to six weeks to work up to an increased pace. Regular exercise programs should include a progressive workout schedule.

Begin exercise with a warm-up period to increase blood flow and body temperature gradually. After the warm-up period, elevate the heart rate with continuous aerobic activity for at least 20 minutes. Following intense aerobic activity, allow blood pooling in the extremities by gradually decreasing the intensity and the heart rate over the cool-down period.

Someone first beginning an exercise program may notice a slight weight increase. Muscle is twice the weight of 1/2 in size of fat. Your bones also weigh more when you are fit because they absorb calcium, rather than losing it.

When you begin an exercise program to improve your ability to cope with stress, increase your pain threshold, lose weight or improve your body shape and self-esteem, lay going whether it be from willpower, inspiration found in scenic surroundings, from a role model you may appreciate, or from knowing that change will come. You will find that all of these are secondary to one reason just for itself. You will probably find that you love to exercise and that it can be done anywhere, at any time, with anyone or even alone. Exercise is more than a choice, it’s an attitude.

Mon.-Fri. 7:30 - 5:30

Located 1/2 mile south of McDonalds in Pullman
OVERFLOW was page 1 of a handwritten document discussing Panhellenic challenges and events.

- Wilson attributes much of Sweet Avenue's success to the new director Pat Weber, a graduate student working on her master's in counseling.
- Weber also notes that getting to know the girls is easier in the Panhellenic environment.
- Weber is explaining a commonly known phenomenon: a person's individual philosophy that is allowed to surface when she stands on her own, versus a community philosophy seen when she emerges from her chapter.
- Weber was quick to add, however, "it's the same way for any group."
- Hilary Ben, of Pi Beta Phi Sorority, endorses this feeling: "I love it here. Because it's quieter, easier to be independent, you get to meet other people, and it seems freer."

Wilson explained that Panhellenic is still working out a lot of kinks.
- "There isn't a leverage point if a girl violates the rules. There is no true judicial board that establishes a code of conduct in the chapter houses. Individual chapters have responded well in some instances where rules were broken, but the chapters as a whole are not committed to Panhellenic. We really need to work on this, to make it work and uphold the rules."

This lack of discipline has caused some to dislike living at Sweet Avenue.
- Other problems have surfaced over the past semester. Security was a very big problem at the beginning of the year. The women at Sweet Avenue complained of inadequate lighting outside, which had caused several women to fall down due to uneven surfaces and three incidents of strange older men. These men were seen hanging out on the property, staring into windows and talking to women entering the house. When nothing was done, the women wrote a letter to the editor asking, "What does a girl have to do to get a light around here?"
- The day the letter was published, the house put out inside lights. Weber believes that the improvements on security were made, "because of the aggravation of the girls living here."

Other safety hazards included no fire exits at the rear of the house and easy entry through broken windows on the first floor. Both of these problems have now been fixed.

Matthews: a calming presence

By CHRISTOPHER GATEWOOD Sports Editor

When you're a 5-foot-9-point guard that weighs about 150 pounds, things can go... well, a little physically.

It's November 22 and the Idaho Vandals are playing Sacramento State and are locked in a tight battle. Scott Matthews is being chased around the court by the SSU guards like a pack of hungry wolves. The scene looks like something seen on the local playground. The bigger, older kids chasing around the young punk who's frustrating and outplaying them.

Matthews is fouled considerably. Slipped, smashed and clawed as he calmly steps to the line and buries free throw after free throw. On. The. Night. He. Hits. 11-of-13, and it looked like he should have had a least 20 more attempts. But this doesn't bother Matthews, nothing does. He just quietly scores 17 points, hands out nine assists, steals the ball six times and commits just one turnover. After the game the Sacramento players are left to wonder how they let the smallest individual on the court beat them.

"When I played basketball, guys like Scott would be: 'Well, I'll hit half out of me,'" said Vandal assistant coach Steve Buresh. "I think smaller players get more calls. They get into the lane, get bumped and are on the line. Look at Scott's numbers, he leads our team in foul shooting.

"The most impressive thing about him is his turn-over to assist ratio." Head Coach Larry Eustacy said after the Sacramento game. "Only one turnover is outstanding. His court sense and awareness has been what's kept us in so many games.

If you continue to read Matthews: a calming presence, you will find detailed information about basketball games, player performances, and the strategies used by both teams. The text provides a comprehensive view of the game dynamics, emphasizing the key moments and players that contributed to the outcome. Through a vivid and descriptive narrative, the text captures the essence of the match, highlighting the emotional and strategic shifts that occurred throughout the game. The storyline is enriched with quotes from coaches, players, and witnesses, offering insights into their experiences and perspectives. The text also mentions the outcome of the game, providing a clear account of the victory and the contributions made by the Idaho Vandals to secure their win. The narrative concludes with a broader look at the implications of the game for the team's season and future prospects. Overall, Matthews: a calming presence offers an engaging and informative read for fans of basketball, providing a deep understanding of the game and its impact on the players and teams involved.
Matthews had been plenty good enough for the Vandals. From the recruiting process he was the most polished and fundamentally sound player on the team. He led the Vandals in scoring in two of the three scrimmages including one 30 point performance. He has started every game for the Vandals this season and is averaging 9.5 points and 3.8 assists per game.

"I think I've been successful helping the team," Matthews said. "Whether it be scoring, passing or whatever. I just want to help us win games. There's always ways to improve as a player and as a team."

To pinpoint an area of weakness in Matthews isn't easy. He's a capable student with over a 3.0 G.P.A., works hard and doesn't complain. Dig a little deeper and you might find a slight flaw in his temperament. Matthews is unfappable to the point where some might wonder if he really isn't a zombie in sneakers. Maybe he's too unfappable. Matthews wears a face of stone that would take a chisel to change.

"I think there are times when Scott needs to be more assertive and get a little more fiery," Barnes said. "He's very quiet on the court, but don't let me wrong, he's a tough kid that plays hard. He'll become more assertive with game experience."

"I prefer to keep my emotions inside," Matthews said. "There's so many highs and lows during a game that I like to keep things on an even keel."

Matthews learned about keeping an even tempo while he was growing up in New Washington, Indiana, a storybook town with a population of about 250. One might think this town resembles a sequel to the movie "Hoosiers," but it's quite different. While the fictional town of Hickory was a backwater in the middle of nowhere, New Washington is nestled near some of the biggest economic centers in the Midwest. Louisville, Kentucky is just 45 miles from New Washington.

"That makes for good familiar," Jim said.

The Matthews' clones were the stars of fame, and the Bob Knight boys. With a year as the only senior boys against teams with three times the school's enrollment. While New Washington fell short, the twins hadestablished themselves as ideal as their appearances. During their senior year, the Scott averaged 16.0 ppg and Barnes averaged 17.0. Over their four-year career their Scott scored just over 1,600 points and Barnes just about 1,380.

"There isn't very much difference between the two," Jim said. "They are just two hard working kids that are self-motivated."

To players who wanted to guard the Matthews twins, it wasn't all that hard. Scott is left-handed and right-footed. The other major difference to the average person is one can't see. The issue is Scott's ability to see. Barnes has 70 percent loss in one ear and 60 percent loss in the other. He has to wear special hearing aids to compensate. Actually, the best way to beat Scott's little problems. He sits in the front row in class and right next to Eustace during the junior meetings. The only compensation the coaches have to make is to look directly at Matthews when giving instructions during a game or at practice. He also does a little lip reading.

"When we recruited Scott the hearing thing didn't concern Barnes," Jim said. "It doesn't take much for us coaches to do the little things and help him compensate. We wanted a hardworking player and that's what we got."

"I was born with hearing loss, so I'm used to it," Matthew said. "Once the only time it hurts me is if I'm in class and look down at my notes and miss something important."

"I think it's made him a stronger person," Jim said.

Besides having so many things in common, both Scott and Jamie call other best friends of the other. Both are finding a lot of success at high school careers, both wanted to continue the brother bond at the college level and found it to be easy. College recruiters were not surprised when they received the 6-5 and 6-2 guards from a small high school didn't exactly leave the competition flustered.

Northridge. Moeller’s efforts were in a losing cause against TCU, but lifted Idaho to a convincing win over Northridge.

“That was the best 40 minutes of basketball we played all year,” Turner said.

The Vandals came back from a tough loss to dominate the Matadors in all phases of the game. The Vandals forced 43 turnovers and more or less had their way offensively with the Matadors.

“We played the way we were capable of playing,” Turner said.

Moeller has been tearing up the court and the Matadors were on the receiving end of her career high 31 points.

For Ellis it was another shot at the big time, a chance to be a real life Rocky. And it would pay him $10,000 — substantially more than he made playing football. A big win over one of boxing’s greatest and Ellis would go from unknown to well-known overnight, just like Rocky.

None of that mattered to Ellis, though. Not the money, or the fame. He only wanted the fight for himself and his family he had said.

Touching, but what Ellis was heading into was the most embarrassing moment of his life, broadcasted to millions of viewers. Big George’s heavy fists made sure of that.

By the second round it was obvious Ellis was way out of his league, like a Big Sky linebacker in the NFL. As he hung on Foreman at the end of the round, taking punch after punch to body and head, he appeared on his way down.

Somehow, though, he withstood the beating and the bell rang in time to save him. In the third round Foreman again took control and continued his pounding of Ellis. The referee stepped in and the fight was over by technical knockout.

Too bad for him. After Saturday’s display his best bet would be to take the money and start on another career, maybe further his education, or take a long vacation. Anything but boxing.

Moeller asserts herself

California born Kelly Moeller is tearing up the court leading the Vandals and nearly doubling her last year points per game average with over 20 an outing. Moeller downplays her success by pointing out that most of the teams they’ve battled have weak post players and Idaho has simply taken advantage of that fact. "Lately some of the teams we’ve been playing are weak at the post and I’ve just been lucky enough to be on."

She moved from Long Beach, California to Ferndale, Washington, about 10 minutes from Canada, with her mother prior to starting junior high school. Before Moeller’s arrival, Ferndale High School had been compiling a most dubious honor. Her freshman year the varsity finally broke a losing streak of 62 games, which happened to be the longest streak in the entire nation.

Ferndale’s losing ways began to fade as Moeller moved up in class and experience. Her sophomore year FHS managed to win eight games. As a junior she lead them to a district play-off birth where they lost their first game by one point on a last second shot. Although FHS didn’t advance further than districts, it was somewhat of a moral victory in it was the first time in countless seasons that they even participated in post season play.

The disgruntled basketball program received even more of a shot in the arm Moeller’s senior year. They took the Northwest League team title and Moeller earned player of the year for the league. FHS went on to take second place in districts and made their first ever appearance in the state tournament.

Though FHS met with early disqualification, Moeller received All-State honors averaging 15 points and 15 rebounds a game.

The success Moeller has enjoyed this season seems to be a product of unselfish team work. "The kids are recognizing Please see MOELLER page 22+"
Hornets get rematch with UI

As Idaho visits Sacramento State tonight, the Hornets might have a little more incentive than usual to beat the Vandals. Idaho scored 76 second-half points in route to a 116-101 victory the last time the two teams met in Moscow on November 22. The Sacramento State players seemed to be fired up before the game after reading an article that misquoted Vandal coach Larry Eustachy as saying this would be the worst team that Idaho played all season.

Eustachy said after the game that a player came up to him and told him he couldn’t wait to get the Vandals on his home court. Well, the time has come as a struggling Idaho team limps into California to take on the Hornets. The Vandals have lost two straight games and three of their last four since their victory over Sacramento State to drop to 3-3 on the season.

Idaho suffered its worst loss in 12 years at the hands of the Washington State Cougars 81-49, and the Vandals are looking to rebound. That rebound might come in the form of Idaho’s top two rebounders Orlando Lightfoot and Dean Watson. Both players had to sit out the WSU game for violations of team curfew rules and will suit up for the first time in 10 days.

Lightfoot is averaging a team-high 10.4 rebounds a game while Watson is second on the Vandals with 18 boards a game. Otis Nixon and Frank Waters have also been big contributors on the boards for the Vandals averaging over five rebounds each. As a result, rebounding has been one of Idaho’s bright spots, as the Vandals have outrebounded their opponents 46.7 to 32.3. That rebounding average includes an impressive 108 offensive rebounds compared to 66 for their opponents.

Idaho’s offense has struggled under inexperienced guard play, while Calvin Ward has continued to sit out with injury problems. The Vandals are shooting a dismal 45.3 percent from the field (263-580) along with a subpar 63.8 free throw shooting percentage.

Turnovers have also plagued the Vandals as Idaho has committed 127 on the season for an average of over 20 a game, while handing out only 66 assists.

Idaho has averaged 72.8 points a contest led by Lightfoot with a 22.6 average while Watson has averaged 15.8. Lightfoot is also averaging an impressive 51.9 percent (14-of-27) from three-point range.

Nixon is the only other Vandal averaging in double figures with 10.5 points a game while point guard Scott Matthews has averaged 9.5. Both players are the only two Vandals to start all six games this season.

Lightfoot and Watson were the major reasons the Vandals won the first match-up between the two teams as the sophomores combined for 53 points. Lightfoot had 29 points, including 16 in Idaho’s second-half run, while Watson added 24 points.

But scoring isn’t a worry of the Vandals, as Eustachy might be looking for a better defensive performance from his players. Idaho’s opponents have scored at least 70 points in four of the Vandals’ six games, two of which were losses. Idaho’s defensive problems have allowed Vandals opponents to score 77.7 points a game.

Sacramento State definitely had the biggest scoring outburst against the Vandals this season in the first game between the two teams, and after watching his team give up 81 points to WSU, Eustachy might wonder if this game might be another scoring showcase.
she can score so they are getting her the ball," said head coach Laurie Turner.

Along with her high point totals, Moeller's accuracy has been phenomenal. This past weekend when Moeller tallied 31 points versus Cal-State Northridge she was 14-of-18 from the field. Last weekend when the Vandals won the Mark IV/Safeco Classic she shot 20-of-29 from the floor for almost 70 percent accuracy. "If you're gonna be in the Big Sky Conference tournament you need kids that can score, and Kelly's the one that's been able to do that," Turner said. "She's got a great touch for a big kid.

"Putting points on the board has become Moellers forte, but in Turner's opinion where she has improved most drastically is defense. "I think she's been playing with a little more heart on defense," Turner said. Indeed she has been a force on the inside. Moeller has limited her assignments to usually less than double-digits. Standing no less than 6-foot-3 she is definitely a force to be reckoned with. Hustle, not technique seems to be Moeller's strong point.

"Ever since I've been here she (Turner) has really been on my back about defense," Moeller said. "I don't think about how to do it, I just can't let my person score."

Teammates praise Moeller's standout performances and attribute them to the improvement of her entire arsenal.

"I think she's improved 100 percent over last year," said teammate Julie Balch. "Her shot selection is much better, her defense is much better, she's just playing great."

And now Moeller is on track to graduate next December with an advertising major in the school of communication. She doesn't want to live in an area as big and impersonal as L.A., but also not as small as Portland.

"I'd like to get a job in advertis- ing," Moeller said. "Maybe in the Seattle or Portland area."

Moeller has started this season off on the right foot and some- what carried the Vandals, but she doesn't look at in the same way some might.

"Anyone on our team is cap- able of going out and scoring 30 points," Moeller said. "They're just getting the ball to the open man and it's on."

"Kelly's just really taken it on herself to lead the team," Turner said.
FOOTBALL — Nevada is undefeated no longer. The Wolfpack had its 12 game winning streak, including 22-in-a-row at home in the quarterfinals of the NCAA Division I-AA playoffs.

The Wolfpack lost a 30-28 heartbreaker to Youngstown State when Rick Schwendinger missed a 27-yard field goal with time running out. The Wolfpack were able to win close games all season, but their luck finally ran out Saturday. The 13th ranked Penguins (10-3) advanced to next Saturday’s semifinals against Samford, who defeated James Madison. Nevada trailed 17-3 at halftime, but cut it to 23-20 on a 1-yard run by Ray Isaac, but Nevada again 13th ranked Penguins (10-3), came back when Vargas threw a 2-yard TD pass to Mike Senior against SDmford, who with just over seven minutes left in the game. Nevada increased its lead to 30-20 on a 1-yard run by Bryan Reeves and a 35-yard field goal by Schwendinger. The Grizzlies were crushed 15-2, 15-5.

The Grizzlies won 22 consecutive matches coming into the tournament, but were handled by the taller Tigers. It was the second year in-a-row that Montana was ousted by Pacific. The Tigers made it the all the way to finals last year before losing.

Washington State also lost in the first round to the New Mexico Lobos 15-5, 11-15, 19-9, 15-4. It was the first trip ever for the Cougars in the tournament.

Vancouver band rocks Moscow

Review by Leslie Alexander
Staff Writer

Last Saturday, John's Alley was rockin' when two bands from Vancouver, Bernstein entertained a large crowd of party hounds. Nyla started the warm up for the head-banging group Chaos.

The whole night reminded me of "Head Bangers Ball" with women wearing slinky dresses, cameras flashing, men with longer hair than mine and make-up, (which is past my hair strap--the hair I mean), the smell of black leather and cigarettes, and some little short man buzzing around with a camcorder. It really got crazy when bodies started slam dancing.

To get back to the rock-n-roll, Nyla's latest tape is called Cow 20. Jonathan Marlow Rue, lead singer of Nyla was doing a promotional job at the concert, giving out free tapes and cool stickers to everyone.

Well, the Moscow cops also participated later in the evening when Nyla started packing up. A parking ticket was served to Rasha for his truck was parked in the alley. I guess the Moscow Police Department has no taste in music.

After the two bands packed up, the party continued into the wee hours of the morning. For those of you who I am talking about, I wish that hangovers were too civil. The general hour everyone started crawling home was around 5 a.m.

I hope the trip to Moscow was a memorable one for Nyla and Chaos, because the parties at John's Alley (and myself among them) will remember the friendly and very talented members of the bands. I hope they remember me.

Just one little reminder for those of you who enjoy live music, remember to give those donations at the door, they do need support and gas money to get back home, (right guys?)

Opera reveals lies in marriage

Review by Metila Bianco

On Thursday night, I saw The Beggar's Opera at UFV Hartung Theatre. I was impressed with the production overall, but I will not mince words, I did not really enjoy it much. It was just the overall style that I could not relate to--sterotypical punks, cheery dance moves. (Not that I could do any of those myself.) Also, I did not like the longish plot augmentation segments with Peachum and his computer; both drowning on. Still, go see it. It is free to UFV students with a Hartung theatre card, available at Do it Express in the SU.

The overall production was done very well. The end was pretty cool, especially in the parts where it sounded like Beltmonism.

Another standout was the character of Mrs. Peachum, he was the most entertaining character, hands down. He was revoltingly shallow, relly and sleazy. She was the best costume of all, too. Her gold lame rito shimmered seductively with competition with the are from the rhinestones of her glasses, and her hair was at least two times bigger than her entire body. She was perfect as the real estate developer's wife. She was vicious, bitchy and concerned with money exclusively; she was really gross.

When you go and see this play, try to banish Irene Carole songs from your mind, but don't get your hopes up. The Flushdance dosage just may be too much for your nervous system.

Long Walk sends message

By MEYLA BIANCO

I've seen quite a few racially oriented films whose themes are designed to examine issues between two groups of people, but I really feel that The Long Walk Home is one of the best ever.

It was moving, honest depiction of humanity as a whole, which displayed the terror of racial discrimination and looked closely at its victims. The film, which is a direct result of racial hatred in this film is built into characters, not just left as empty shells. The director states that a certain people, a certain political viewpoint. Therefore, the viewer really gets a sense of the pain that they must have felt. Not only are the blacks in this film seen in moments of despair, as victims of violence and as quasi-cisopaths, but they are seen doing the things all people do, like eating and exchanging gifts, and this facet of reality gives the film its strength.

The film takes place in the early sixties in Alabama during the Montgomery bus banning movement. Whoopi Goldberg plays Odessa, a housekeeper for an upper middle class family, and Sissy Spaceck plays the role of a woman who finally listens to her conscience.

The story is another harry, American style, view of oppression of minorities, prejudice, ignorance, and fear. Spaceck begins the film as a product of intolerance who heeds her moral and looks down on all blacks. However, this attitude is precipitated mostly by her traitorously stupid black-hating husband, who we refer to as Ignoramus from here on. He is basically of the opinion that Odessa is of lesser importance than other white human beings, and is immersed when she catches his wife picking Odessa up for work two days a week. The reason that Spaceck is driving Odessa is because the bus ban is in effect and because she has business near her house every Tuesday and Thursday. Of course, Ignoramus won't tolerate this, and the situation gets very difficult for all parties. For Goldberg, it means raw and bloody feet due to shoes that don't fit, and the proverbial long walk home. For Spaceck, it means an inner conflict. For Ignoramus, it means that his wife is helping another "nigger." Spaceck begins to feel very sympathetic to her maid Odessa, and very angry toward her husband, who she realizes has been negatively affected by his uprising. She decides she needs to get away from the situation and then goes to Montgomery to attend a convention. The film shows the way she feels in those five days, before she finally has the courage to leave. Spaceck has been influenced in this film by the fact that the future for Spaceck is not entirely clear. To me she could probably go either way. More specifically, she could either continue to be sympathetic to Odessa, or she could get scared of losing the conventional life she has worked so hard to acquire.

The last scene of the movie is a moving and well done culmination of all of the strife in the movie. It is also its favorite scene. The scene is the people who supported the bus ban had begun a caravan for "carrying the working women home," and Spaceck has become involved in it, unknowingly to Ignoramus. He and his thug office buddy pull up and prepare to handle the people involved. His compatriots point out his wife's car, and also the fact that she is standing next to it. Of course, his reaction is predictably one of outraged horror that she dared to go against him, and that she is a "nigger lover." The rest of the scene is a bunch of desperate attempts to fight, made by the white men toward the few black men, but mostly women. Now for the most exciting part. As the white men's misguided hormones begin to flare out of control, and things are getting scary for the women, they start to sing. Yeah, sing. They do not yell or scream back, or sink to the level of Ignoramus, but instead sing a gospel song that is really powerful. I loved that part. There are all of these white men scuffling around, saliva and ties flying, and these black women just calmly begin to sing this haunting song while wearing overcoats, and in Odessa's case, uncomfortable shoes. The Long Walk Home is an excellent movie.
Rock and roll band’s style reminiscent of Black Crowes

By JEFF KAPORTASY

News Editor

I was prepared to sit down and write a less-than-flattering review. I thought I’d made the common mistake of hearing the good song, rushing to Faulkland with a drooling rockstar and high hopes, only to come home and listen to one song drag into the next. The one great song I could come up with would have been a $16. Then, after listening again right before I wrote this, I changed my mind. The same thing happened when I bought Mark Zappa’s Physical Graffiti, or Living Colour’s Visions. It’s one of the albums that grows on you, like a shirt or a member of the opposite sex. You start noticing little things that sound flat out cool.

The band is called Drivin’ N Cryin,’ and the album is called Fly Me Homelessness. The method of music is quite simple: Plug in two guitars and a bass, put a drummer, get in a bluesy-rock frame-of-mind, and see what come out of it. The result for this band is an album that sounds more than a little like the Black Crowes. It’s not quite as good, but if you are a Black Crowes fan, this album may be your next item.

Cryin’s front man Kevin Kinney has a wicked rasp, and is capable of writing some pretty decent lyrics. They don’t always connect, but manage to stir up some good images. The music is structured around basic guitar riffs that a dude with one year of guitar lessons could crank out with a little practice. Indeed, this album makes a journey album sound downright complicated. But Kinney manages to pull it together, just like the Crowes did. Fraid the album is not brilliant. This is not one album you sit through in awe from song one, but it definately has its moments.

The biggest moment comes in the form of “Build a Fire.” It was their first song on MTV, and the inspiration to buy the album. This song conjures up images of rolling down the highway on a Harley, complete with a Camel (pass the lighter), leather coat, and lumber biker babes. The thumping guitar and drums assault your ear-drums with the best of them. This song represents the best and the most brilliant of grun- gy guitar rock-n-roll. The song almost sees Neil Young in the distance.

There are other moments as well. The title track encompass- es a fearless guitar riff with lyrics that even get a little polit- ical: “Mother America is brandishing her weapons/She keeps me safe and warm with threats and misconceptions.” Another great one is “The Innocent,” with a chord pat- tern reminiscent of an early Kinks song.

The rest of the songs sit together in a gutters-infested hump, which is by no means an unappealing hump. In fact, at times it’s downright appealing. Drivin’ N Cryin’ is one of those bands that makes me proud to enjoy home-brewed rock and roll. The guitarists wall with simplic- ity, and the vocals soar with abandon. See ya. I’m going home to listen to this album again.
