Idaho governor launches plan to boost state's education

By STEVE CORDA

In his State of the State address earlier this month, Idaho Gov. Cecil D. Andrus stressed continued commitment for a plan called, "The 5 Keys to Excellence," first unveiled in September.

According to Andrus, "The 5 Keys" represent meaningful, specific, and affordable steps that can be immediately taken to restructure and retool the state's educational system on a program of excellence.

Scott Peyerl, Press Secretary to Gov. Andrus, stated the basis for the creation of the Strong Start proposal. "We have discovered to our chagrin that more money does not equate to better performance in public school children."

The proposal calls for the allocation of $3 million, which is to be given out in a series of three-year grants. The number of individual grants is undetermined at this time. If put into action, the Strong Start program will accept one application from a pilot program in each of the 133 school districts in the state.

According to the governor, these are the five keys to unlock a future full of opportunity for Idaho children:

- READY TO LEARN
  Notes the importance of good nutrition and a nurturing environment in learning, and proposes heightened emphasis on meal programs and social services in schools. The Idaho Office for Children will coordinate strategies to improve health, nutrition, and general well-being of children to enhance potential learning ability.

- PLUGGING PARENTS IN
  Calls for parents to demand more of the schools, and schools to demand more of the parents. Parents must expand their role as the first and most influential teacher in the child's education.

by participating in the child's education: both at home and at school. Schools need to find ways to open the classroom to parents, and parents must better understand how profound their influence on their child's learning is.

- SCHOOLHOUSE DECISION-MAKING
  Decentralizes policy control from the administration and shares meaningful authority with teachers and parents. Those accountable for children's performance must have discretion in the design of the learning environment.

- "FUTURE FRIENDLY CLASSROOMS"
  Helps reduce problems of large classes by improving access to technology for students and teachers. This access must be improved because students' ability to earn a living in the 21st century will depend on their knowledge of technology.

- IN-BETWEEN TIME
  Promises establishment of creative before-school and after-school programs to turn the parents' daytime challenge into an advantage for the child.
Scientists receive research money

By JEFF KAPUSTA

Amered with $212,000 and a thirst for knowledge, several University of Idaho scientists are setting out to answer the questions echoing through the forests.

During a three-year study, assistant professors of forest research will attempt to answer several important scientific questions concerning forests and their effects on global warming.

For instance, what variables control the productivity of forests? Why are huge amounts of carbon dioxide being lost somewhere over North America? How much energy does a tree use to make roots? And how might forests be managed to counteract the greenhouse effect?

Although there are not burning questions for most people, the answers could have a profound effect on everyone.

Professors John Marshall and Kim Mattson, assisted by graduate student Jingen Qi, will attempt to measure the amount of carbon dioxide released from the ground of an Oregon forest.

They will also try to distinguish between carbon dioxide released through the root systems and through the decomposition of organic litter, such as leaves and roots.

"We can't just keep managing forests by rule of thumb. It's surprising, but we know only approximately what conditions cause forests to go from being carbon dioxide sources to being carbon dioxide sinks," Marshall said.

Until now, scientists have assumed that once a forest reaches a late old-growth stage, the trees release the same amount of carbon dioxide as they consume, but there is some doubt to whether or not that is true.

"It's crucial that we find out how much carbon dioxide the trees are taking up or releasing, if forests in the future are ever managed with an eye for the greenhouse effect," according to Marshall.

New Faculty Secretary named

"I was delighted with the positive response to this opportunity among the University of Idaho faculty," said Zinser. "I believe the success of the candidates," said Zinser.

The faculty secretary's position is half-time during the academic year and full-time in the summer. Adams' appointment began the first of this month. He will serve this spring upon the retirement of faculty secretary Diane LeTourneau and begin his regular three-year term July 1.

As faculty secretary, Adams' duties will include preparation of the agenda for faculty meetings, serving as a channel of communication concerning administrative and faculty participation in policy development and Regent's actions, and serving as an official, non-voting member of the Faculty Council.

Adams received his undergraduate, master's and doctoral degrees from the University of Chicago.
Grocers’ liquor license suspended

BY STEVE CORDA
Staff Writer

According to manager Jeff Cantemessa, Jeff’s Foods on the corner of Third Street and the Moscow-Pullman Highway, has held an Idaho State Liquor License for 15 years. However, this year the liquor license was suspended for a week.

From 2 a.m. January 5 until 2 a.m. January 12, Jeff’s Foods had to clear its shelves of all alcohol products. The suspension was a result of an infraction which occurred nearly a year ago. According to Cantemessa, on March 16, 1991 an employee of Jeff’s Foods who was a month away from being 21 purchased some beer on a payroll-deducted employee charge account. The 21-year-old clerk who sold him the beer was a personal friend of the underage employee. Both employees had been to bars together, and the clerk assumed his fellow worker was of age. As a result, the clerk did not ask for any identification.

Cantemessa went on to say that the underage employee went behind Jeff’s Foods with a 21-year-old companion where they were approached by plainclothes policemen. The Jeff’s Foods employee fled, but he left behind a beer. By tracing the charge receipt and consulting the highway department, the police determined that the young man was not 21 years old. The clerk involved lost his privileges to sell beer and was fired as a direct result of the incident.

Payson feels that with a board to supervise the two divisions of education both “K-12 and higher education would be better served by separate boards.”

Various state departments are supporting the governor’s proposal. According to Ellen Connamara Brown, Public Information Officer for the Idaho Department of Employment, her department is “just one of many agencies involved withStrong Start.”

“Existing programs are being flled into what the governor is doing with Payson’s proposal.”

Payson’s plan includes applications to both education which will be studied up and down the state and then be determined to another agency.
Non-credit classes offer diversity

Over 100 University of Idaho noncredit classes are listed in the latest edition of "New Directions," published by the Enrollment Program.

The noncredit catalog is available around the Palouse and at the Enrollment Program office, just inside the main entrance of the Continuing Education Building.

"This year's winter/spring classes include many new offerings, as well as some perennial favorites. Courses will be offered at the Palouse Empire and Moscow malls, since these locations have proved to be popular in the past, according to Mary Lou Thompson, Enrollment Program coordinator."

"Besides the popularity of the courses themselves, we think the mall locations are favorites with our students because there is plenty of parking, accessibility for the disabled is readily available, the malls are easy to commute to and from, and folks can go shopping either before or after a class," Thompson said.

One new block of classes is aimed at singles, and includes bowling, geology, a transition workshop, and a single parent workshop. The latter is offered in cooperation with Washington State University, with financial assistance from the Moscow Kiwanis Club.

Bookstore justifies book return policy

By DOUG TAYLOR
Associate Editor

If you would like to get a heated response from a University of Idaho student, ask about the buyback policy for textbooks at the University Bookstore.

For real information, however, the person to talk to is Assistant Manager for Books Peg Godwin. According to Godwin, the university bookstore is looking to serve the student in the best way possible.

"Contrary to what people think, our main concern is service to the student, and not to make a quick buck," she said.

Godwin indicated there are multiple factors involved when it comes to buying back textbooks. She said the process starts at the beginning of the semester, when a professor will call her and indicate what textbook is desired and how many copies are needed. Godwin said she then calls the book company and gives them the number of textbooks which she feels will cover the students in that class.

Godwin said there are a couple of different scenarios which can occur when students turn in their books at the end of a semester.

If professors use a textbook two semesters in a row, the bookstore will buy a specific amount of textbooks at 50 percent of the new book price. For example, a $54 textbook will fetch $27, but Godwin noted used books can be the best value for a student. This is because half of the new book price is given to students regardless if a book is new or used.

"All of the proceeds from these sales are put directly back into the college bookstore," she said.

"We try to find the very best authors for MacMillan textbooks, and they don't come cheap. Factors like author royalties and support materials really add up in the price of a textbook," said Lyman.

Godwin said the bookstore does break even profit-wise, but it is not because of textbook sales. She indicated that through so-called "nonessential" items, such as sweatshirts, the bookstore is able to keep going.

"The big misconception among students is that we make money by only giving them a little bit back for their textbooks. Our nonessential items are what help us to break even," Godwin said.

The said many college bookstores give substantially lower amounts of money to students for buying a used book for $38, which would normally cost $54, $27 is still the amount returned to the student. "Thus, a student gets a much better return on their money with a good used textbook," said Godwin.

The other scenario is the "one-in which the bookstore won't buy back books. According to Godwin, the reason this is done is because professors change books from semester to semester.

Sam Lyman, a sales representative from MacMillan Publishing, said professors change books because there is constant new information being produced in areas such as science.

Lyman also talked about the little things which tend to make textbooks expensive.

College bowl to see best and brightest of students

By PETE GOMNEN

Students with a love of trivia or a dream of one day being a contestant on "Jeopardy" may want to flex their mental muscles at the College Bowl Campus Championship Tournament, to be held at 9 a.m. Saturday in the Student Union Building.

This will be the 15th year that the event, billed as "The varsity sport of the mind," will be held at the university.

The College Bowl is a game of quick recall that pits teams of students against each other in timed matches, according to Campus College Bowl Coordinator Judy Wallins.

"Questions will be asked from a wide range of subject areas, including current events, sports, music, movies, history, science, literature, art and many other topics," Wallins said.

Ten to 15 teams, each consisting of from three to five students, will compete in a double-elimination tournament. The winning team, plus four at-large players, will make up the varsity squad, which will represent the university at the five state regional tournament to be held at the University of Oregon in February. The winner of the regional tournament will advance to the national playoff in Washington, D.C. in April.

"In the 15-year history of playing the College Bowl, the university has won five regional championships," according to Wallins.

"One year, the team from the University of Idaho finished fifth nationally, losing to the eventual champions from the University of Minnesota."

Ray Horton, a student who competed in the tournament for three years and a member of the team that went to the national tournament, said "the College Bowl is a place a student can use all the worthless little trivia learned in classes."

unlawful entry incident have been charged of the vandalism for now, but an investigation into the incident is still in the works," Weaver said.

One of those arrested for unlawful entry, Grant Woodhead, said all four people who were arrested spent the night in jail, as well as paid a $30 fine in court. He indicated they did not steal or damage anything in the Kappa house.

"The police involved in this incident were on university property, and so they may face judicial council action as well," said Pitman, Assistant Greek Adviser Chris Wuthrich agreed with Pitman's assessment of the situation.

Weaver said the unlawful entry matter has been closed, but he expressed concern over the acts of vandalism which occurred within hours of the four arrests for unlawful entry.

"Vandalism is an extremely senseless crime because the person who commits this crime acquires nothing of monetary value. This kind of crime hurts everybody because of higher insurance rates as a result of a vandalism," Weaver said.

He encouraged anyone with information on the vandalism to call the Moscow Police Department.

Should the team from the university advance to the national level, it will have some heavy and heady competition, Wallins said.

"Typically, other regional winners consist of teams from schools such as Princeton, Brown, Rice and M.I.T."

For further information concerning participation in and registration for the College Bowl, contact Wallins at the Tutoring and Academic Assistance Center.

Housing: Students, you get what you pay for

The situation is the same, but once again at the start of the semester the housing prices are going to be a factor for University of Idaho students.

The fact is, if you don't have a place to live by now, you probably not going to get one. Get a warm coat — you might be living on the streets.

According to Latah County Planner Pam Peterson, the first problem is that there simply isn't enough moderate to low-income housing in the greater Moscow area. Unfortunately, this is the only type of housing most students can afford. And don't go thinking you can run to nearby Troy — it's booked solid.

The second problem is that investors aren't willing to build moderate-to-low-income housing because they don't feel they can turn a large enough profit. You can't really blame them. After the complexes themselves have been erected there's still the matter of making them attractive and worth living. Having a place to live doesn't payoff for the cost of improving the quality of apartments.

The third problem is how livable the existing apartments throughout town really are. The September fire which gutted the apartments at 410 South Lilley St. across from Taco Time could be an indication of things to come. Those apartments were held in high-balls, but they aren't the only ones. Take a drive up Sixth St. some afternoon to the Elslyn Complex near Mountain View Road. The scene looks like a poor excuse for a third-world country. The buildings are ugly and the living conditions are adequate at best, but there is always room for improvement. Students, however, have to be willing to pay for it.

One answer to the problem could be to have more students live on campus. At the current rate 60 percent of the University's live off campus while just 40 percent live on. Just a 10 percent shift to have 50-50 living rates would make a difference to those trying to find housing. Dormitories can be like living in the March motel, but residence halls might be a solution.

Worried that they will find housing on campus because of the discontented number of men on enrollment at the university. And the guys on this campus that need living quarters can usually find a cubbie hole.

But what of those people who want the privacy of off-campus housing? We are definitely going to need more, and people are going to have to be willing to pay for it. Rent is exceedingly low in Moscow and subsequently, the quality of many apartments is exceedingly low. When it comes to rates on rent, Moscow is behind the times. To get more units of high-quality off-campus housing, people are going to have to be willing to pay a higher or rent which means getting over the psychological barrier of paying more than $600 a month.

The university requires all incoming freshmen to have just a 2.0 GPA and 750 SAT score to be admitted. Since the university granted admission to 94 percent of the freshmen who applied. With admissions this easy, expect enrollment to go up and with that a need for more housing.

According to Peterson, we are going to need a good Samaritan to come to town and build more moderate- and low-income housing.

Don't hold your breath, it could be a while.

— Chris Gatewood

Taylors wrong man for award

Last winter, Saddam Hussein and Norman Schwarzkopf engaged their armies in a battle which, despite the sensational predictions, turned out not to be a pipe-dream battle in the desert of southern Iraq.

But for the first two or three months of 1991, hardly an evening of network news passed without a lead story mentioning either of these men. Their images were burned deeply into the American consciousness, and some people even fantasized about the way things would be if making a run for the White House this November.

Late last summer, a handful of Soviet military hardliners tried to rein in Mikhail Gorbachev and return the U.S.S.R. to the blink of day states of socialism.

Oswald was patsy in Kennedy’s death

According to Oliver Stone the filmaker, for a people are shocked by the movie JFK, which recounts the stories and events behind former President John F. Kennedy's assassination.

Most people are aware that the man held responsible for President Kennedy’s death was Lee Harvey Oswald, and that Oswald in turn was killed by Dallas nightclub owner Jack Ruby. Stone, however, openly suggests in his movie that Kennedy’s death resulted from a massive government conspiracy involving the Central Intelligence Agency and the United States Army.

For over three hours Stone bombarded moviegoers with information as to how Kennedy was really killed. Stone mixed actual events with his own interpretation of the assassination into his movie to show that Oswald didn't even pull the trigger. Nonetheless, this movie really didn’t hit home when it was revealed that the government files on the Kennedy assassination wouldn’t be opened until the year 2025. The main character, then New Orleans District Attorney Jim Garrison (played by Kevin Coster), summarized this best when he asked if this would be a generational thing that is handed down from father to son and the real truth is never revealed.

Garrison’s question about the honesty of the federal government is a legitimate one. There are many issues that I’m sure the American public would be interested in knowing, such as the activities of the CIA. However, the amount of information released to the American public appears to be very scant. As a result, many Americans including myself are ignorant about what really happens in government offices.

This brings us to the issue of what the government feels it is necessary to cover up information. Like anything else which is hidden from the public eye, information of this sort is probably incriminating to those officials who deem it necessary to hide it. Labelled under "classified" or such misnomers as "matters of national security," this information may never reach the public.

The problem with this is that the American public never knows the real truth behind a controversial issue. For example, Kennedy learned from military advisors in Vietnam that sending American troops into battle then taking credit for the victory is a fraud.

Kennedy was enlightened by this advice and was prepared to pull his advisors out of Vietnam, ending American involvement in the war.
If through and InvifNiisiL'ovasalllr-'when.

Many more notable and noteworthy events occurred during those 15 minutes. Johnson retired from baseball. William Kennedy Smith was tried and found guilty of rape. And Elizabeth Taylor got married. This was the same time a construction worker was killed.

So it was more than a little surprising when the editors of Time magazine in what can only be described as a fit of journalistic integrity, gave the top cable televisin\mogul Ted Turner as its Man of the Year.

Perhaps someone should take up and remind the editors of Time that the purpose of most journalism is to report what happens, and not to become the type of creature that inspired the phrase, "Don't try to tell the truth, tell what happened.

It all boils down to the difference between actually making news and just reporting it. Turner, who founded the Cable News Network, does have a certain amount of vision and rough charisma. He did nurse CNN through its infancy when many of its detractors beset the cable station as nothing more than an extravagant boondoggle.

Unfortunately, he also has an ego that could fill the Kibbee Dome. His outspoken attitude and brashness probably did more to garner the award than anything else. Ted Turner is after all, not a journalist. He is a businessman who makes his money off the efforts of journalists. That is an important distinction.

If Time wanted to reward the journalists of CNN for their efforts, it should have done so. Turner should not be allowed to walk away with the glory from the efforts of hardworking reporters and faceless cameramen.

They have in the past brought many scenes from the frontlines of Desert Storm and the vivid images of Tiananmen Square into America's living rooms.

It was the men and women of CNN who were in Baghdad in January as the Iraqi capital fell victim to the American firestorm. Ted Turner was probably at some upscale social party with his wife-to-be, Jane Fonda.

CNN was there at the Clarent Thomas nomination hearings recording every word spoken and each tear shed by Thomas and his lawyer. Turner was busy grilling the television camera-as and doing the tomahawk chop with his Atlanta Braves clan as they made their way through the National League playoffs and into the World Series.

In August it was CNN that covered the aborted coup attempt in the Soviet Union while for all we know, Turner was horseback riding on his ranch near Bismark, Montana.

In past years Time has bestowed its award on the computer as Man of the Year, and on the Earth as Planet of the Year. This time it was a Test. Time missed its beat. CNN as Network of the Year? St. Ted Turner as Man of the Year? No, this is about as likely as Dick Nesbitt winning the World Series.

The argument is made that CNN has been instrumental in bringing the war in the Persian Gulf to the American people. The argument is made that CNN has been instrumental in bringing the war in the Persian Gulf to the American people.

The argument is made that CNN has been instrumental in bringing the war in the Persian Gulf to the American people.

The argument is made that CNN has been instrumental in bringing the war in the Persian Gulf to the American people.

A special edition of the cable channel, "CNN on CNN," was recently aired.

This example goes to show that a government cover-up may not be as innocent as hiding federal pay raises from public view. It can involve threats, bribery and sometimes even murder. Many government officials don't seem concerned about this, and why should they? After all, many leaders in our government have the ability to bury documents which could incriminate them. This above the law mentality leads them to think that they can do whatever they want. More often than not they can. Yes, if the Kennedy files were released right now, there might be information about a cover-up involving many government officials. This would result in prosecution and public disgrace for those involved. However, when you consider that 50,000 American troops might have been spared if Kennedy had survived long enough to pull his advisers out of Vietnam, these files became immensely important.

The end result is that there was a government conspiracy involving President Kennedy's death for one basic reason: if the government didn't have to hide, then they would have no problem releasing these files to the public.

Idaho runs past Boise State 76-61

By MATT LAWSON

The Idaho Vandals had suffered from a case of mediocrity heading into their Big Sky matchup against Boise State Saturday night at the Kibbie Dome.

Idaho sported a 7-7 record and was looking like a team that might have problems finishing at the top of the conference. But the "new look" Vandals emerged and the Broncos were the unsuspecting victims as Idaho rolled to a 76-61 win.

Idaho (8-7, 2-1) used a three-guard offense, a precision fast break and an unusual defensive strategy in hand Boise State (9-6, 3-3) its third straight loss after nine consecutive wins.

Marvin Ricks, Andre Whitley and Ricky Wilson provided the much-needed spark for the Vandals. The guard trio combined for 34 points, 15 assists and 14 rebounds and shot a respectable 12-for-23 from the field.

There's a lot to playing three guards," Idaho Head Coach Larry Eustachy said. "That's the way I've always liked to play and always wanted to play and I think there's something to that." The Vandals established a majority of the offensive push for the Vandals, but their defensive effort and rebounding was the difference in the game.

Boise State's starting backcourt of Jermaine Hallburton and Lane Vaughn were held to five points on 3-for-12 shooting and had seven turnovers.

"I think they have excellent team quickness," Boise State Head Coach Bobby Dye said. "I thought they played extremely well. I thought they did a real nice job tonight and we were extremely disappointed in ourselves."

"I felt real comfortable out there," Whitney said. "The transition game is what I look forward to. The second half I didn't think they would stop me from penetrating and bringing the ball up the floor."

Eustachy's main goal for the game was to stop Boise State's center Tanoka Board from getting the ball inside along with slowing forward Billy Fikes.

Idaho's defense consisted of both post men dropping off inside on either Board or Fikes while leaving the other player open at the high post.

"It was a pretty ingenious little plot when you think about it," Board said of the awkward defense.

The defense slowed the tandem in the first half, and both players picked up two fouls in the first half of the game, but finished with 20 points.

Ricks looks to overcome problems
Transfer looks for success in the classroom and on the court

By MATT LAWSON
Sports Editor

Many times in life, love is a memorable thing. But for Marvin Ricks, his love for the game of basketball has caused him his fair share of problems.

The main problem came in academics, as Ricks had to sit out last semester due to grade troubles.

Idaho coach Larry Eustachy feels Ricks' problems could have come about his love of the game of basketball.

"Basketball is everything to him and that's been the problem in school," Eustachy said of Ricks' struggles. "He's about as big a freak as anyone I've been around when it comes to basketball. You can go out 45 minutes before practice and he will be shooting."

And Ricks' away from basketball and academic problems is something he would soon like to forget.

"I learned a lot from that and it will never happen again," Ricks said. "I don't fault anyone for my mistakes. I fault myself. It's behind me and I need to keep it behind me.

Although Ricks talks of the problem being behind him, Eustachy is a little more realistic about the situation. Eustachy pointed out that if Ricks finishes below a 2.0 again that he will lose his eligibility.

"He's up against the wall and he's going to have to do it," Eustachy said.

Although Ricks attended all the Vandals practices during his suspension, he wasn't cleared to play until the fall semester was complete. His first game back was in the Toledo MVP Tournament, two Vandal losses to North Carolina A&T and the host school Toledo. Although Idaho dropped both games to fall to 5-5, Ricks' return was a pleasant surprise as the junior guard scored 31 points in the two games to make the all-tournament team.

When night he (Eustachy) first called my name and put me in I was kind of nervous when I stepped to the line and scored 31 points in the two games to make the all-tournament team.

"Playing again was a moment that was long overdue for Ricks as he hadn't played in a college game in close to two years. Ricks last played at Chipola JC in Florida before sitting out last season and the first half of this year."

"It felt real good," Ricks said of finally playing again. "It was something that was missing to me in my life when I wasn't playing basketball."

Ricks continued to roll since his opening success, and scored a career-high 31 points in leading Idaho to a crucial 84-80 come-from-behind overtime win at Northern Arizona Jan. 4.

The Atlanta, Ga., native has averaged over 19 points a game to rank third in the conference and scored 19 points in Idaho's 76-61 win over Boise State Saturday night.

Ricks has taken some of the scoring load off his teammate Junior Big Sky leading scorer Orlando Hallburton in this game, but Ricks is averaging over 20 points a game and has become a scoring threat for anyone who comes to him. He has been able to score in a variety of ways.

Vandals suffer frustrating loss at Boise State

By BEV HOMES

The University of Idaho women's hoop team compiled a 4-2 record during Christmas break and their overall record stands at 9-6 while the Vandals conference standings places them as a contender at 2-1.

Idaho's four wins and two losses came in the form of hot and cold streaks. The Vandals started the break off with a resounding bang taking four in a row by knocking off conference foes University of Nevada 62-42, and Northern Arizona University 87-75. Idaho also downed Gonzaga University 85-47, and the University of Portland 94-80, in the other two non-conference wins. In the win over Nevada forward Karinette Edwards played an all around game leading Idaho with 12 points, seven boards and three assists in continuing Idaho's dominance of the small court by taking their twentieth straight victory from the lesser Big Sky rival.

In the win over NAU forward Krista Smith and center Kelly Moeller paced Idaho with 17 points each in an easy victory. Idaho center Kelly Moeller and forward Krista Smith were named to the Big Sky "Athletes of the Week" for their efforts over the break.

Moeller earned her award for her play against Portland, Nevada and NAU where she scored 61 points, pulled down 29 boards, dished out five assists, had seven steals and eight blocked shots. Moeller also hit 16-of-17 free throws throughout Portland surpassing a school record and notched two double-doubles against Nevada and NAU.

Smith locked up the honor for her domination of Gonzaga where she hit 5-of-7 from the field and sunk 13-of-16 from the line for 23 points. Smith added nine boards, two assists, three steals and a blocked shot.

Idaho's winning streak came on the heals of two thoroughgoing losses to Oregon State and Missouri State. Boise State entered the contest with unblemished 2-0 conference records.

"In the other two games those teams went up and it should be a good match-up and it is," Turner said.

Case in point the UNLV-Duke championship two years ago.

The Vandals entered the contest with a 17-9 advantage in the all-time series, but Boise had beaten Idaho four times in a row at the Boise Pavilion.

The Vandals women and Turner returned to Moscow stunned, predicting that Boise's eclispe trip would result in a different bottom line.

"Now they (Boise) have to come up here and play us," said Idaho forward Brenda Balch, "I'll be back time.

The Broncs took an early lead and never glanced back. Idaho had a difficult time putting together an effective attack due to Boise's pressuring defense and an unstoppable offense. Turner felt that Idaho's biggest problem was the defensive end of the court and it in turn affected the Vandals' scoring potential.

"We're not playing good defense," Turner said. "So we can't even turn around and can't get our transition game going well.

The feeling of defensive ineptness was shared by Idaho guard/forward Batch.

"We just didn't play very good defense," Moeller said. "And they shot the lights out.

The Vandals are looking forward to the next game with Boise again and the attitude is that Boise won't repeat its land-slide victory. Idaho felt that they will improve and the Broncs can't shoot with nearly as much accuracy.

"I don't think Boise can play like that and shoot so well again," Moeller said.

"When we come here and play Boise, we get 140 people there to cheer and there's 3,000, that's a little different," Turner said.

Boise entered a dismal 0-4 road game record, but Turner feels that particular statistic is misleading and points to the fact that her squad has encountered some quality teams at away bouts.

Pre-game hype called for a closely contested game with no clear or obvious favorite. Both Boise and Idaho entered the contest with unblemished 2-0 conference records.

They just came out and really took it to us," Moeller said. "We were getting good shots, but some days your on and some days your off.

The only consolation was that Smith lead the Vandals with a substantial 15 points, but the next highest scorers could only muster four apiece.

The Vandals also lost the services of Balch to a deep thigh bruise via a collision with big Toby Torroldos of Bulgaria. The number of games that Balch will miss is yet to be determined.

The Broncs pulled in over three thousand fans that contributed to the Vandals road trip woes.

Track season looks promising for Idaho women

By LOREN ROBERTS  Staff Writer

After suffering disappointing Indoor and Outdoor Championships last spring, sixth year Idaho Head Coach Scott Lorek feels this year’s women’s squad should be at the top with the league’s best.

"Personally, overall this could be one of the best teams here at the university since I’ve been here. The part of it that’s discouraging though is that two or three of these girls in the conference have their best also."

Returning for the Vandals will be conference standout Jackie Ross who will compete indoors but redshirt outdoors. Ross will run the 5,000-meter dash and compete in the long jump and triple jump. She has finished as high as eighth in the nation in the triple jump.

Junior returner is junior Karen McClusky who is considered by Lorek as "one of the best hurdlers in the conference."

She’ll be competing both indoors and outdoors in the 100-meters, 400-meter intermediate hurdles and 110-meter high hurdles.

After narrowly missing the conference championships in the 10,000-meter dash by four seconds last year, Diane Knudson returns from a minor stress fracture for her senior year. As well as the 10,000 meters, Knudson will also compete in the 3,000 and 5,000-meter runs.

Newcomers for the Vandals include freshmen Laura Vervacke, Emily Wise, Kerry Huse and Heide Bodwell. Of these, Bodwell is ranked as one of the best in the nation in sprints and the long jump.

Track and Field News lists Heide as one of four top newcomers to the league," Lorek said. "She will definitely have an impact on the team right away."

Transfer Sherri Marlatt, who last year placed seventh in the heptathlon and sixth in the 400-meter dash for CIS at the JUCO Nationals, will also be looked upon for success this year.

Indoors, the Vandals have one of their best schedules ever with five of six meets in the Kib-bie Dome. Those include the 17th Annual Vandal Invitational Feb. 14, and the Big Sky Championships March 6-7, before going to Indianapolis next weekend for the NCAA Indoor Championships.

Idaho kicks off its outdoor schedule at the Washington State Invitational April 4, and the season culminates with the Outdoor Championships in Boise May 20-22. One of the meets Lorek is particularly looking forward to is the Minnesota Invitational, May 9 in Minneapolis.

"At the meet in Minneapolis the competition will be incredible with the University of Minnesota, UCLA, Iowa State, Wisconsin-Milwaukee, and North Dakota all being there," Lorek said.

With the Big Sky Conference continually improving and developing so well, Lorek feels that the competition for women will be at its peak this year.

do Lightfoot. Lightfoot averages over 22 points a game and has faced several defenses in attempts to stop him. Although Eustachy feels Ricks' scoring ability has added a lot to the team, it is not necessarily the most important contribution the 5-foot-11 guard has made to the Vandals.

"I think his attitude is the best thing he has," Eustachy said. "His attitude is excellent. I just like the way he plays hard and competes. He leads by example." Ricks realized that Eustachy needed stronger play from his guards, but he isn't as precise as his coach when pinpointing his contribution. "My job is to go out there and do everything possible to help us win," Ricks said. Ricks admits academics haven't always been his strong suit, but it was the main reason he came to Idaho. During his second year of junior college, Ricks' academic problems scared several schools away and a lot of the schools that continued to pursue him were narrow-minded. Too many of the schools weren't really interested in academics as much as what Ricks could do for them on the basketball court. This is what made Idaho the top choice. The trust he gained in Eustachy was what really caught Ricks eye. "He really stuck with me and he had confidence in that I could go out and do it," Ricks said. "I promised him I would get an education, plus play basketball." Idaho's victory over Boise State raised its record to 6-7 on the season and 2-1 in the Big Sky. The record is respectable considering all the adversity the Vandals have faced during the year. Ricks and his teammates have been forced to deal with several setbacks during the season, from injuries to the loss of key players. "It's less than ideal, Eustachy said. "We didn't get back well and we didn't board well in the second half."

Boise State continued to struggle from the field after intermission which led to numerous fastbreak opportunities for the Vandals. 10 of Idaho's 20 second-half field goals were either dunks or layups, several of which resulted from fastbreak opportunities. "We were in good shape heading into the second half but we did still have a lot of things to go fastbreak opportunities for Idaho," Ricks said. "We didn't get back well and we didn't board well in the second half.

The comeback began when the Vandals faced Idaho in their last meeting in 1992. "I'm not going to sit here and say it isn't. Because of the instant rivalry to say it isn't crazy." Eustachy said. "I think they totally dominated the game," Dye said. "They competed real hard and did a real nice job. There wasn't any question who was the best team." The Vandals continue their conference home schedule Thursday night as they host the Idaho State Bengals at 7:00 p.m. Weber State University will visit the Kibbie Dome Saturday night at 7:00 p.m.
The hills of the Palouse will be alive with music Saturday when the Washington-Idaho chorale presents its fourth concert of the season.

The concert will be Saturday, Jan. 18, at 8 p.m. in the University of Idaho's Palouse Union.

A second performance will be Sunday, Jan. 19, at 3 p.m. at Lewiston High School.

This is the second season that the chorale has been included in the concert series. Sylvia Nance of the Washington-Idaho Symphony says the chorale consists of 75 to 77 people.

Some chorale members had an opportunity to participate in the Baroque chamber music experience at the baroque style this summer. Paul Klemme, the conductor for the group, said many of the members were able to participate in the Classical Music Seminar which was sponsored by the Moscow-Idaho chapter. Klemme said four choirs from around the U.S. performed the music of Franz Joseph Haydn. "It was very exciting," Klemme said. "We were making music in the same place he wrote it for."

The chorale will begin its program Saturday with a performance of "Jephtha" by Giacomo Carissimi. "Jephtha" is based on an Old Testament story about a warrior who battles the enemies of the Hebrew people. Jephtha tells God that if he is allowed to win the battle, he will kill the first person he sees as his daughter.

Nancy Zylstra will be the guest performer and will perform the female soloist's role in "Jephtha." She will be accompanied by the orchestra. The work is taken from the book of Psalms and is an exciting and kind of place," Klemme said.

The final selections sung by the chorale will be the Love Song Waltz by Johannes Brahms. Included with the waltz will be a performance of "When the World is Young" which is a collection of folk poet-music from many different cultures.

Tickets for the concert are available at Ticket Express in the UI Student Union or Coral Drug in Pullman, or at the door on the evening of the performances.

Treaty Grounds brewing up business

By TANYA MADISON

The newest restaurant on the Palouse is hoping to brew up enough business to warrant opening a satellite restaurant on the Palouse.

Barsagier Joe Frankel said that business has been fair, but not up to the standards of the restaurant.

The restaurant is a member of the Palouse Brewpub Association.

"We're doing really well for the first two weeks before the students left for the holidays," Frankel said. "Just this week, things have started to pick up. We're doing the busiest day that we had since Christmas."

Frankel was an experimental branch of the Fort Spokane Brewery. Brewery owners hired Frankel and his wife, Tonya, to come to Moscow and open a restaurant. The restaurant's biggest selling point, said Frankel, are the specialty beers.

"The restaurant is an experiment by the owners who are seeing how much of a demand there would be for specialty beers in Moscow," Frankel said. "We are trying to see if we sell enough beer to justify putting a brewpub in Moscow."

When we started selling 300 bottles a month, we would probably build a brewery. But the owners want to convert the money until we can show that there is a real demand for specialty beers in this area.

Now, the Moscow and Pullman variables of the specialty beers are brewed at the Fort Spokane Brewery but only sold on the Palouse. Frankel said that if sales of the specialty beers soar and a brewery is built, the Moscow Gold and Pullman Red will be made and sold on the Palouse.

Treaty Grounds now has a special marketing technique to promote its specialty beers.

"The owner started off with the idea of setting up a brew pub that sells mainly beer and a little food. But right now 2/3 of the menu is specialty beers and about 1/3 is from the beer, which is fine with us."

Frankel said the pub boasts beers from 14 different micro-brewery restaurants. One restaurant experience came from working for The Onion restaurant in Spokane with his wife. He also worked for the Olive Gardens in Spokane and helped to set up an Olive Garden in Colorado Springs, Colorado. "We used our knowledge of those menus and information to come up with our own."

Frankel said that Treaty Grounds is set up to serve all segments of the community - not just brew hounds. "We want to serve everybody," he said. "We want to maintain an identity of having these individual atmospheres. From 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. we're more focused toward families. And after 3 p.m. we're more focused toward the young people. We want people to know that they can come here in the morning here in a lunch hour. From 3-9 p.m. we're more focused toward the young people. We have a kids menu and crayons for the kids and we're offering a different dining atmosphere. After 9 p.m. we're a nighttime entertainment crowd."

The Treaty Grounds Brew Pub employs between 35 and 40 people. The pub came as welcome relief for the owners of the The Onions.

"The building where the pub is located had sat vacant for over five years after Pizza Haven moved out. It is always beneficial to have a space filled instead of remaining open," said Debby Smith, the manager at the Palouse Empire Mall. "I think they're doing a great job. It's very well. I have received a lot of positive feedback on their food. I think they are doing to do very well."

Frankel thinks so too. "Business is booming for the first two weeks," Frankel said. "And I have every reason to believe that we will be busy again once everyone is back in town."

Kelley hopes to get students behind SARB

By TANYA MADISON

Matt Kelley is starting the new year by starting a new job. Kelley was elected in December as the new president of the Student Alumni Relations Board.

"The SARB is a group that is open for people to get involved. It is not just a group that is open for students to get involved, but also a group that is open for faculty and administrators to get involved too," Kelley said.

Kelley said that SARB doesn't have a lot of recognition among students, the group isn't a big group that becomes popular, but it is one that is important because it is a link between a student and an alum. Kelley said, "We really need to do this and we need to do it and we hope to see the seniors away with happy memories of the time they spent here and looking forward to being active as alumni. Kelley

Kelley won't be devoting all of her time to improving student-alumni relations this semester. Kelley is a senior majoring in communications with a public relations emphasis and is a senior majoring in communications with a public relations emphasis.

Kelley is looking forward to starting her first semester as president of SARB. Kelley said it is the members of the board that account for most of her enthusiasm.

America: from fries to size, living in the land of large

Tired, listless, caffeine-starved Americans require fountain drinks that come in a myriad of sizes. Gone are the days of the eight-ounce pop. Now we have 44-ounce guzzlers that you need a wheelbarrow to carry.

America has now entered the age of huge and soda pop seems to be the best example. In 1961, 7-11 food stores introduced the BIG GULP, 32 ounces of fun for entire families. Americans eyes popped at such a large drink. 7-11's ad campaign stated that they even gave you "Freedom of Choice", that is the freedom to fill your veins with much pop as possible. Gone were the 6 and 16-ounce returnable bottles.

Men and women alike could pull their much thirst up to the counter, pour their drinks from an impressive fountain and walk out feeling satisfied. They could have as much ice and pop as they wanted. God, how this country has progressed!

But pop isn't the only place where you'll find the words HUGE and HUGER. Those words are now present in all walk of life. At McDonald's they have extra large drinks, extra size fries and milk in those little eight-ounce bottles.

That isn't enough anymore.

Three 44-ounce jugs of Coke are sitting on the passenger seat of my car. The whole scene is making me very nervous as I try to get them to my desired destination without spilling them all over the plush interior of my car.

Two of the sodas are for female friends and the other is for me. After stopping, I cradle the drinks in my arms and deliver them to my thirsty friends. Their eyes bulge at the massive containers now sitting before them.

"Those sodas are HUGE," says one. "I can't drink allllll that," says the other.

The problem is that a woman 5-foot-4, 165-pound and a man 6-foot-3, 230 pounds has a slightly different version of what it really means to be HUGE. Life was simpler 30 or 40 years ago, when Coke came in those little eight-ounce bottles.

“Kuffs:” same story, new star
By Jay Fussan Staff Writer

Christian Slater started to receive critical acclaim in 1988 with his portrayal of a psycho-pathic high school student in the coming of age film, The Heathers. Slater has been acting since 1982, but it was his acting in The Heathers that garnered him the notoriety. Later, he earned third billing in Kevin Costner’s Robin Hood and the leading role in the lengthy horror movie, Sudden Death. Now, after a cameo in Star Trek IV: The Voyage Home and a movie called Kuffs and this movie is another one that the star is planning on keeping with Slater’s bad boy image, it really doesn’t set off the sparks that it should.

Slater is George Kuffs, who in the first two movies, was the audience. Kuffs is a 21-year-old boy who is always persevering his brother, Tony Goldwyn, the movie’s Chum – plays Slater’s friend and fellow cop Frank, who provides the movie with most of its comedic moments. Goldwyn is on the rise. Watch out for him in the future. But Slater is still Slater, and he knows what’s happening to him. But Slater’s strength is his ability to handle his image in Ferris Bueller’s Day Off, and though Slater has his charm, it wears thin by the end of the movie.

The villain in Kuffs is predictable and dumb. There are two main villains in this movie, and one of them is named Cat. Yeah.
The screenwriters were working off the same blueprint as in the movie they dispatched of Cat while trying to make a turkey for his girlfriend, the main villain, then to kill Kuffs. Kuffs escapes, and makes movie history by starting his revenge.

Of course, the movie isn’t all bad. Tony Goldwyn, the villain in Ghost – plays Slater’s friend and fellow cop Frank, who provides the movie with most of its comedic moments. Goldwyn is on the rise. Watch out for him in the future. But Slater is still Slater, and he knows what’s happening to him. But Slater’s strength is his ability to handle his image in Ferris Bueller’s Day Off, and though Slater has his charm, it wears thin by the end of the movie.

The villain in Kuffs is predictable and dumb. There are two main villains in this movie, and one of them is named Cat. Yeah. The screenwriters were working off the same blueprint as in the movie they dispatched of Cat while trying to make a turkey for his girlfriend, the main villain, then to kill Kuffs. Kuffs escapes, and makes movie history by starting his revenge.

Vietnam exhibit shows affect of war on arts

A new exhibit at the Washington State University Museum of Art focuses on the Vietnam War and examines the conflicting feelings Americans have toward it. The exhibit originated with artist Gunther and toured the country before arriving in Pullman.

"A Different War: Vietnam in Art" is the first major traveling exhibit to critically analyze the effect of the Vietnam War on art in America during the past 25 years. The exhibit is comprised of works by 52 artists, some of whom are Vietnam veterans. "A Different War" shows myriad viewpoints regarding the war and how its effects are still felt.

The exhibit houses more than 100 pieces of art from a variety of mediums including painting, sculpture, ceramics, glass blowing and photography. "It covers the gamut of types of art," said Kjerstie Gunther, the administrative assistant for the museum. "Some of the art was done by professional, well-known artists while some others were done by veterans or family members of vets."

Gunther said that the exhibit will have powerful effects on younger generations as well as baby boomers. "Whether you know that much about the 60s or not, the exhibit will have a powerful impact," she said. "Very few images are pleasant to look at. Images of war, hatred and violence are disturbing. There are also a lot of images that are in protest to the war. They don't blame anyone who fought, but they call into question the things that people do," Gunther said.

WSU is also hosting a film and lecture series in conjunction with the art exhibit. The series is called "Vietnam in the Age of Aquarius." Films being shown in the Fine Arts Auditorium at WSU during January and February include "Platoon," "The Deer Hunter," "War Stories: 'Nam," and "Woodstock." Gunther says there are discussions after the films, "to help provide a context of the war, counterculture, civil rights and women's movement." All of the films are free and open to the public.
