ACTIVISTS PROTEST ATTORNEY

By BRANDY CORSTELL
Assistant News Editor

FANS weren’t the only ones who met Sarah Weddington, the attorney who successfully argued Roe v. Wade, at her book signing in downtown Moscow late Friday afternoon. A few protesters showed up as well.

The protesters, from the groups Moscow Right to Life and WSU Students for Life, circled the sidewalk in front of Bookpeople with signs saying “Abortion Kills Children.”

“We’re protesting abortion certainly,” said Verne Godd, one of the protesters. But we’re mainly protesting against her promoting her book. She’s made her legal career from abortion and that’s what she’s lived on (income).” Later Godd said, “We’re angry people, why she’s shooting at the protesters, the title of Weddington’s book is ‘Blood Money.’

The protest brought employees from several downtown businesses into the street doorways to see what was happening. It also prompted several comments from people passing by.

UI welcomes new doctor to Student Health family

By CHRIS YOUNG
Staff Writer

The family at the Student Health Center got a little bigger recently. Dr. Sam Monger, from Council, Idaho, started seeing patients just last week, and has only lived in Moscow for the past two weeks.

“And we’re still moving,” he said.

Moscow may not be the largest of towns, but compared to Council, it is a thriving metropolis.

“The population of Council is only around 850, so this is a little step up,” he admits. Still, Dr. Monger didn’t jump right into the fast life that Moscow provides, he bought a house outside the city limits.

“We needed a little bit of elbow room,” he said.

Originally from Sweetwater, Tennessee, Dr. Monger has lived in Idaho for 18 years now. “We decided to move out west to a state with a small population,” he said, and Idaho turned out to be just the place.

He set up a private practice in Council, and lived there since he left Tennessee.

Before he moved here with his family, Dr. Monger studied at Memphis State University as an undergraduate, and then went to medical school at the University of Tennessee, also in Memphis. There he tacked on his medical degree with a General Practice emphasis.

With that degree Dr. Monger brings the university years of experience. He places the heavy cost at the center in stride as if he has been here a year, not just a week.

But, like all of the students, Dr. Monger is already making plans for the Christmas break.

An avid skier, Dr. Monger plans to go to Sandpoint to try out the Schweitzer Ski Resort. The number of ski hills that are surrounding Moscow is pretty exciting for Dr. Monger. “

The difference between Idaho and Tennessee is great, he said.

"I don’t really get cold up here, because there is no problem with humidity. In Tennessee the humidity makes it seem much colder."

Not only is the weather nicer in Idaho, but the people are friendly, and the low population is another plus. “There are people everywhere down there,” he said.

Dr. Monger has already assimilated into the family at the center. Nurse Fosberg, who has been at the center for over 26 years, lined up the patients for Dr. Monger and gave him quick summations of the ailments that await his care.

Last Friday afternoon, a couple needed a blood test, because, according to Nurse Fosberg, they’re getting married in Mexico.

Dr. Monger seemed puzzled at the choice of their matrimonial destination. "You couldn’t drag me down there with a tract," he replied.

And that’s just the type of doc-tor that Sam Monger is. He enjoys the small town life and the people of Moscow.

UI to build new College of Mines and Earth Resources building

By DAVID JACKSON
Staff Writer

The completion of a new Mines building on campus by the fall semester of 1994 will not only benefit the Mines program, but the entire university, according to the Dean of the College of Mines and Earth Resources.

Robert W. Bartlett, the head of the Mines departments for the last five years, feels the new building will help other departments around the university as much as it will his. “Not only will it consolidate the entire College of Mines to one general area, but it will free up a lot of space around campus,” he said. “Right now, we occupy space in seven different buildings. Once we get our new building, we can vacate that space and others can move in.”

The new building will be called McClure Hall, after former U.S. Senator James McClure. It will be about twice the size of the current Mines building, or approximately 70,000 square feet. McClure Hall will be a four floor building, consisting mainly of laboratories and offices. There will be one sloped classroom capable of seating 75 students, as well as four smaller classrooms. Bartlett feels the new building will complement the current one well. "The new building will be primarily for research and office space, with some classes also," he said. "The old one will be used in pretty much the same manner it is now. Between the two, we should be able to contain all of our programs."

Zahala Gilglov Albanece, a Boise architecture firm, has been hired to design McClure Hall. Bartlett said he expected the design to be complete by January, and the construction bidding to start by March or April.

McClure Hall will cost approximately $10 million, seventeen percent of which will come from state funding. The rest will come from the federal government and private donations.

Support of the building among the 300 students in the College of Mines and Earth Resources is high. Travis Wambcke, a senior in Geological Engineering, said McClure Hall will be a welcome addition. "It sounds like it will help all of the departments within the College of Mines come together," he said. "The new building is probably more for the graduate students, but it will be nice if all of our classes and labs are near each other."

Rock not the only one for the president's job, write-in says

By SHARI BRETON

Richard Rock is not the only person running for the job of ASUI President anymore. Erik Gullickson, a University of Idaho Music Major, is a new write-in candidate for the position.

Gullickson decided to run when he saw last Friday's Argonaut. "I don't think he is the only one for the job," he said. "There are many people on campus who are more than qualified to run.

Albertson's has donated $100,000 to furnish a new map room as part of the library expansion and remodeling project.

Money from the Boise-based supermarket chain will be spent on three items for the map room. One is a new $40,000, will be used to purchase special cabinets to hold the library's 150,000 paper maps. Another $35,000 will make digital mapping resources available by computer link to departments across campus. The final $15,000 will help acquire oversized tables to study the maps on.

"The new map room will bring all our geographic resources together in one place for the first time," said Ronald Force, U's Dean of Library Services. "We're grateful that Albertson's has expressed their appreciation for the importance of providing our students and the people of Idaho with a solid foundation of geographic knowledge."

The UI library has map holdings second only to the University of Washington in the Pacific Northwest. It also serves as the state depository for U.S. and state government documents, U.S. patents and Earth Science information. The library's maps served an important election function, too.

"The digital mapping archives were recently used as a resource for legislative redistricting. They are often drawn upon by county and city officials for planning and economic development."

Gary Michaels, Albertson's, Inc.'s chairman of the board and chief executive officer, said the company's support for the UI library, "fits with our corporate philosophy of wanting to be involved in education projects with long-lasting benefits to Idaho.

The Albertson's contribution is part of a $750,000 campaign by the UI Foundation, Inc. to equip the new library. Work on the library began in 1991. The $12.7 million project will house the library's collection of 1.7 million volumes.

The UI library is the largest in the state of Idaho and over 59,000 people visit it yearly.

"This is just wonderful," said one man sarcastically. "As long as they don't harass me, I don't care," said another.

Weddington said she drew inspiration in about half the cities where she speaks and signs books. She doesn't see it as a problem. It's an appropriate action, according to Weddington, because it's part of the American tradition of free speech.

Weddington said the protests are even valuable to the pro-abortion cause because they remind people to not become apathetic. "It's helpful because it reminds people that this is an issue that isn't over," said Weddington.

Kthea Lyser Carr, president of WSU Students For Life, agreed the abortion struggle is far from over from the anti-abortion perspective. "We're trying to slow down the slaughter of babies, 25 million since 1973," Carrat said.

"If the people who haven't made up their minds are the ones that we need to reach," Carrat said. The protest was effective at influencing some people, according to Carrat. She said a group of people told the protesters they decided not to go into the bookstore after they found out who Weddington was.

Carrat said the experience of an unplanned pregnancy is as real to her as any other woman. "I had one myself and chose abortion," Carrat said.
Thanks to the Anderson ‘administration’ for a job well done

Just when students thought it was safe to venture out of the house.
Most Americans are rightfully worried weary of the political process. Negative campaign ads, smarmy innuendos and the traditional round of rah-rah speeches have left many in the viewing and reading public thankful that it is all over.
But for students at the University of Idaho, the fat lady has not yet begun crouching. Politics is alive and well on this university campus.

Students in this week can take to the polls to elect their ASUI and GSPA officers. Now while these people won’t be making the decisions that will affect the future of the world, they are making decisions that will affect the future of this university and every student who goes here.

Students have a right and an obligation to get to the polls on Wednesday and cast their votes. Negative comments about this university abound, and now is the time for nay-sayers to do something to change the way things are run.

The students who serve in the ASUI are a dedicated group. They truly work hard to make sure that they are representing the students interests and not their own. In order to guarantee that this continues, students need to take the five minutes to vote.

This should also serve as an opportunity to thank the current administration for all of its hard work. Amy Anderson, the current ASUI President, has worked tirelessly on the behalf of university students for almost a year.

She has put in long hours, given up eating, sleeping and studying and has made a difference at this university.

Meeting your mother for the first time

Three days from now, college students will be happily packing their bags and heading home for the week. Others will be looking forward to a quiet week in Moscow and taking a break from school.

All in all, this time of the semester is a happy one, because it is a time when families come back together.

Next week, I too will be reunited with family, but it will be for the first time since my birthday.

This Thanksgiving, I will meet my mother for the first time. I will meet the woman who, 21 years ago, gave birth to me and chose to give me a better life by giving me up for adoption.

I have no anger or hard feelings for her. In fact, I hold her in the highest regard because she gave me up for a very good reason. Love.

The emotions I do feel are confusion, curiosity and fear.

I am confused because I was always raised that being adopted wasn’t important because my mother was my mother no matter what.

Thoughts of a confessed lunatic

"Have you ever danced with the devil in the pale moonlight?"

—The Joker in Batman

There was a full moon last Tuesday night. It sailed over the eastern horizon on a cool breeze and took me by surprise.

With midterms exams to study for and research papers to write, some students were too busy to notice the moon in the first place. Of those who did, there was probably a fair amount who didn’t bother to give it a second glance.

Then there were folks like me who spent the evening watching old Luna in a state of near-hypnosis.

Moon watching is underrated as far as leisure activities go. More relaxing than a dip in a hot tub and more entrancing than Fantasia, it is a diversion that seems to have fallen out of favor these days.

"Why?"

Because moon watching is free! If the advertising wizards on Madison Avenue could invent a way to bottle moonlight and sell it for a buck an ounce, people would line up for it.

"Do you believe in the moon and moonlight?"

Sure, my grandmother told me that the moon was défini from this Latin word for the moon. Spend too much time under the light of the full moon and moon you’ll start hearing voices and seeing things that aren’t really there.

And think about what happened to Lennie Chaney in all those old wolf movies.

Or maybe it’s because the moon, which stirred the souls of poets and lovers for millennia, no longer dominates our imaginations like it did before 1969. It was in July of that year that Neil Armstrong became the first human to leave footsteps on the moon’s surface.

As his footsteps kicked up tiny puffs of moon dust, Armstrong woke us from our dreams of lunar enchantment. When moon rocks were brought back to earth and displayed in museums, the now-conquered moon became domestic, almost commonplace.

An aspiration that had tagged us at our hearts since prehistory had been realized, and we focused our gaze on things more distant and unsustainable. After all, when it comes to dreams, humanity has a habit of forsaking the familiar and pursuing the unknown.

For some reason, full moons bring to mind a story I once read about two siblings. One child was born in a full moon and was left within sight of a clock, counting each second and cursing every minute that wasn't spent productively.
If one day happened to slide past without a book being read or a letter getting written, he had to be redoubled on the morrow.
The other child wandered through the woods, aimlessly lost in thought. No attention was paid to the passing of seconds, hours or weeks.
Reading books and reflecting on the significance of human achievements were neglected in favor of sitting on the banks of remote streams and worshiping the ivory glow of moonlight on the water.
The industrious child eventually went off to college, became a wealthy doctor and traveled the world. The quiet one lived in a cabin near the forest, tended a garden and measured the practical beauty in things as simple as maple leaves and moss-covered rocks.

The siblings eventually met again. During one of their conversations, the world-weary doctor reminisced upon a lifetime spent chasing progres and comfort. Each year had brought new and weighty challenges. In fact, so heavy were her responsibil-ties that she walked with a slight stoop, as if she bore a back-breaking burden.

Her brother thought back on his life. Although aging had taken its toll on his body, he felt younger and more carefree than he ever had. He only stopped when he bowed down to admire a patch of wildflowers.

Still feeling the strength of their sibling bonds, he tried to convince his sister to leave behind her world and join his, and she tried to convince him to return with her to a world of deadlines, rush hours and concrete.
In the end they parted ways, never to meet again. She could not conceive of a happiness that was measured in anything other than dollars; he could not understand wealth based on something that did not include blue skies, the scent of a pine forest and untainted moonlight.

There may be more urgent busi-tnesses to attend to, but there can be nothing more important than taking a few minutes every night to watch to moon and wonder...

Incidentally, the next full moon is on Dec. 9. Anyone care to dance?

family loved me. Suddenly, it is the focus of my life and everything I do.
I am afraid of the unknown, of what I don't know about her, her life, her family and her past. I have known all of my life that I was adopted. My grandparents happily remember the day my parents got me, when my grandpa almost threw his fishing gear on top of me because he didn't see me on the couch.
"Why should I have seen her?" he laughed. "Frank and Sharon didn't have any kids the day before.
Mom recalls the frustration at not knowing from one day to the next if the mother was actually going to give me up.

Sometimes, Mom and I would laugh if someone said: "My, how your daughter has your looks," but most of the time we never even gave it another thought. We just seemed to forget somewhere down the road that we weren't biologically related because we had spent all of our lives together.

Once I even sat through an entire 10th grade health class figuring how did I would be when I died based on my family genes. After class I remembered that I didn't know my natural great-grandfather. He could have died when he was 40, instead of living to a ripe old age, like mine had.

These of you who know the woman who gave birth to you, it sounds so trivial.
"Why does it matter who car-rried you for nine months?" you may ask. "It's only who raised you that matters."

Well, in a way you are right. It is definitely more important to me who took the time, trouble and money to care for me the last 21 years.
My family knocked me off my feet when I found out that not only did they not mind if I launched for my natural mother, but Mom was the one who went out and found her. This kind of support has showed me time and time again that this is what family love means; these are true family values. And these qualities obviously do not have to be inherited genetically.

But not knowing who my natural family was always left a space in my life. It's like a person spends their entire life building a brick wall, every piece of information you gather is another brick. At the bottom of my wall, there is one little hole that could never be filled.

Now, my natural mother will be bringing the missing brick and mortar to me next week.
I was lucky enough to be raised in an open, honest and very loving family. It wouldn't be going too far to say that I was spoiled rotten and loved to death by my grandparents, aunts and uncles just as much as my cousins.

But while I may resemble my family, and my moon swears that I look like her sister, I still feel a little different.
I can't look through my baby books, because I don't have things like pictures of me at birth, or my baby shower. I have no idea what time of the day I was born, or how long my natural mother was in labor. Do I get my blue eyes from the mother or the father?

I admit most of the things I am curious about are pretty trivial. I am not going to die if I never know who I got my nose from.
I will, though, feel a little more at ease knowing that last brick is set firmly in place.
Hey, Greeks: ‘way to go!’

Editor:

There was an article in the Nov. 10 Argonaut concerning the Greeks and their efforts to help out children crossing the roads to and from school. To this I say: ‘Way to go!’

I am not a married student nor do I have any kids but it has concerned me to watch some of them cross the street. I have seen them get a little careless in their play and have gotten a little too close to oncoming cars. Once I saw a group of boys cross the Third Street intersection near the Student Union Building against the light. There was traffic coming but the drivers were aware enough to stop.

I can just imagine bumping along in my four-by pickup, not seeing them and running a child over. It is not a pretty thought at all and I’m sure no one wants to go through that experience. To the Greeks I say again: ‘Keep it up!’ This is an important step toward protecting these kids and is a good way of avoiding disaster.

Wilson, Sheikh endorsed for ASUI elections

Editor:

Diversity is vital in student representation. Dave Wilson and Aamna Sheikh will supply that much needed diversity to the ASUI senate in 1993, if elected.

Wilson is a senior chemical engineering major. The senate has been dominated with youth in the recent past. Wilson will offer an older, more experienced student voice which has not been heard in the recent past. His work ethic and sincerity is exactly what the senate needs. A vote for Dave Wilson is a vote for a job well done.

Senator Sheikh is seeking her third term as ASUI senator. She has more ASUI experience than any student at the UI. Sheikh works solely for the students with no ulterior motives. Cast your vote for Aamna Sheikh to keep a strong foundation in the ASUI senate for 1993.

BSU Union funding explained

Editor:

This is in response to the column written by Shari Iretin in which she voices her concern regarding the Student Union Building at Boise State University. In the column, Iretin claims that our Union was funded by “private industry.” She also claims that the University of Idaho is the “low man on the totem pole” when it comes to state funding.

It’s too bad that someone who has risen to the position of news editor would write a column like this without doing absolutely any research. While Iretin was in our Union, she could have picked up a copy of our Student Handbook, turned to page 12 and noted that all students pay a SUR (Student Union Building General Operations fee), which pays for our Union. From the time of the construction of the Union in 1967 and up to last year’s renovation project, students have not only paid for the Union but have also been very involved in the planning and design. Two years ago nine student representatives were involved regularly regarding the renovation of the Union.

Iretin wonders “where on earth is BSU getting all of its money” for structures like the Pavilion. Student fees. Our student fees go to many different programs here at Boise State and some people question the validity of this fee or that fee. The Student Union is not only a structure that is the hub of student activity on campus, but also a structure that students can feel good about funding.

Another thing about “the well-funded BSU.” If Iretin would have done some homework, she would have discovered that BSU received $47 million this year from the State Board of Education, while ISU received $27 million, and this is regarding only the “General Education” part of the budget, though ISU has more students than the UI.

I would be more than happy to answer any questions regarding how many other programs BSU students pay for through student fees, or you could just drop by the Union and pick up a free copy of the Student Handbook.

Gay bashing in poor taste

Editor:

It is truly sad to see gay-bashing on the pages of this or any other college publication. It is doubly sad to see the perpetrators of these outbursts using the Bible to justify their bigotry.

It is true that homosexuals were condemmed in the Bible. In the Old Testament we learn that God’s chosen people, the Hebrews, were to multiply greatly in order to become as numerous as the stars in the sky (Genesis 15:13) and occupy all the land from the Nile to the Euphrates (Genesis 13:18).

The commandment to be fruitful obviously did not apply to the Egyptians, the Canaanites or any other foreigners.

In the New Testament gays were condemned by Paul, not because they did not produce children, but because he was opposed to sex of any kind, even within marriage (1 Corinthians 7).

Jesus did not condemn gays as all, but he did say something about how to deal with people who are “different.” When asked “Who is my neighbor?” he told the parable of the Good Samaritan.

The Jews had been taught to hate the Samaritans because they were “different.” But Jesus urged them to love them as oneself (Luke 10:29-37).

Of course, it isn’t easy to turn hatred into love — especially for some of those who call themselves Christians — but if they can’t bring themselves to love gays, the next best thing they can do is to stop urging others to hate them.

Moeller is the best choice

Editor:

I am writing this letter in support of Brad Moeller for the position of ASUI vice president. I have known Brad for three years and acknowledge him to be bright, ambitious and hard working. He has been involved in the ASUI since his first semester as a college student. At that time, he interviewed—as a freshman—for a vacant senate seat, but was appointed as assistant to the president (David Penas) instead. That same semester he ran for the senate and won. Brad worked on various projects as a senator and last fall he was elected to serve as our ASUI vice president.

I strongly agree with Brad’s stand on focusing his efforts toward the ASUI. I do not believe, as Brad’s opponent does, that the top priority of the vice president includes lobbying. The student lobby is important, but filling vacant committee positions and adhering to the immediate needs of students must be the top goal within the ASUI. Brad will surely see that these goals are achieved.

Brad has worked for a considerable number of student concerns. He has focused on making the university handicap accessible and has traveled to the Idaho State Board of Education to fight for fair levels of fee increases. He is adept at assuring that the committees and boards within the ASUI are run properly and efficiently. I feel when given the opportunity, he will continue to be an effective leader of the ASUI senate.

I urge you to vote with me for the re-election of Brad Moeller to the position of ASUI vice president on Nov. 18. He is the best choice.

—Ryan R. Klavensno

Volunteers deserve thank you

Editor:

Last weekend approximately 20 men from the Alpha Kappa Lambda fraternity spent an entire afternoon making improvements to Robinson Park. As a result of their efforts, everyone who visits the park will have an improved softball field to play on and an ice skating rink to enjoy. The week before, many of the same guys took time out to help with a Halloween party for youngsters.

Earlier in October, a large work party made up of members of Alpha Tau Omega convened at Robinson Park to help plant over 400 plants and shrubs. Come springtime park visitors will be treated to the sight of many colorful bluesums.

Many things can be learned at a university, including the importance of being involved in the community in which one lives. Hats off to the people who take time out to improve the quality of life for us all.

Vandals will play for title against Boise State

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

As the Vandals lined up against the Bobcats on Saturday afternoon, the players knew that this was the real deal. This was the game that would decide who was the better team.

And the Vandals had a lot to prove. They were only 1-3-1 on the season, and they knew that they needed to prove themselves in order to have a shot at the championship.

The game started off with a bang as the Bobcats scored within the first few minutes. But the Vandals didn't let that phases them. They quickly regrouped and got back into the game. A few minutes later, they scored their own goal, tying the game back up.

The rest of the game was a back-and-forth battle, with both teams playing their best. But in the end, the Vandals emerged victorious, winning 2-1.

The win was a huge boost for the team and their fans. It proved that they were capable of playing with the best teams and that they had what it took to win.

The Vandals will now move on to the championship game, where they will face their biggest challenge yet. But with the win over the Bobcats, they are confident that they can overcome anything that comes their way.

Senior spikers bid farewell

By LOREN ROBERTS

For two seniors on the Idaho volleyball team, the Vandals finished up their home season the best way they knew how—sending the veteran Boise State to the NCAA tournament.

For Heather McEwen and Annie Hanks, Saturday's match against Weber State was the last one the two will play in the NCAA tournament.

McEwen and Hanks are both captains of the Bobcats and have been looking forward to this moment for a long time. Both players have been playing for the Bobcats since their freshman year and have seen their team grow and improve over the years.

They are both excited to be able to go out on top and leave a mark on the program. They are grateful for the opportunity to have been a part of this team and look forward to seeing where it goes from here.

The Vandals finished the season with a 15-7 record, and the seniors are proud of what they've accomplished. They know that they have left a legacy and are excited to see what the future holds for the program.
UI defeats WSU for 20-win season

By MISSY WILSON
Staff Writer

The Idaho Vandals volleyball team swept past Weber State University in three games Saturday night to wrap up its regular season home schedule. The win gives Idaho a 26-6 overall record and 9-3 in the Big Sky Conference with two league games remaining.

Idaho took control of the match in game one when senior Heather McIwen served five straight points to give the Vandals a one-point lead, 10-9. Dee Porter added another two points and Nancy Wicks sealed up the game with two of her own, locking the final score at 15-10.

Idaho dominated game two with nearly perfect serving and flawless overall play. Senior setter Annis Hanks served four points, including one ace, as Idaho posted a .259 hitting percentage combined with 11 kills. Idaho's defense allowed the Wildcats only four points, paving the way for a 15-4 Vandals win to go up 2-0.

WSU's Allison Bergman, who had a match-high 17 kills, was slowed down in game three after Idaho head coach Tom Hilbert matched outside hitter Dee Porter on her.

Weber State had a good game plan," Hilbert said. "Bergman played well. We had Dee block her in the second game which helped a lot. In the third game they were able to substitute her in and cause some confusion."

As the first two games came easy for Idaho, the third was a different story. Idaho fell to a seven point deficit when WSU's Janna Nelson served five straight points to help the Wildcats on an 11-point scoring run and an 11-4 lead. Idaho quickly retaliated, though, as McIwen and Hanks served three points each to help start their own scoring run of 10 points, and give Idaho a 14-11 lead.

WSU got back into the game by noting the score at 14-14, but Idaho reserve Lisa Stoltz came in for middle blocker Brittany Van Haverbeck in an attempt to serve out the match. Stoltz's serving paid off as she logged the final two points to clinch the game and the match for Idaho. The win gives Idaho it's second best record ever in the BSC.

"We've been in a passing slump the last few matches, and I think we got out of it this match," Hilbert said. "We came out of the time-out and passed well. I think that shows a lot of maturity."

Idaho will have to continue their serving and passing success this Friday night at Boise State University. When asked about playing BWU, Hanks said that Idaho matches up well, which was evident on October 17 when Idaho came from behind to beat the Broncos in five games.

"We're equal, and if you put all our cards down on the table we'll beat them because we're going to play at our level of passing and serving and not let them get into their rhythm," Hanks said.

As well as the BSU match, Idaho will be looking for a road win at Idaho State on Saturday. Hilbert said that he would like to see a large turnout of Idaho fans at the BSU match.

Veteran Vandals head into season deep

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

The Idaho Vandal men's basketball team will be favored to win the 1993 Big Sky Conference Championship as they return seven letterman and all five starters from the '92-'93 team.

Last season Idaho went 18-14 overall and 10-4 in conference play as they made it to the Big Sky Tournament semi-final game before eventual champion Montana ended their season, 69-52.

"I was really pleased with the way the season went," Idaho coach Larry Eustachy said.

"It seems like the measuring stick for a team's success by most coaches is in wins and losses. With me it isn't. We played some very good basketball down the stretch."

Under the third year leadership of Eustachy, Idaho will be looking for its third BSC title in five years. With a core of talented starters and an impressive bench, Eustachy likes the talent he sees on this year's team.

"I think this is the best I've felt about our situation since I've been here," Eustachy said. "I like our players and I think we'll play a better style of basketball than last year."

Of the five returning starters, the individual who will likely stand out the most will again be Idaho's Big Sky Newcomer of the Year Orlando Lightfoot. Now a junior, the 6'7 Lightfoot led the conference in points per game with 21.8, and was second in rebounds with 8.9 a game. More scoring will be looked upon by 6'8 junior forward Donn Watson (13.3 ppg, 7.3 rpg), starting senior guard Marvin Rick's (15.0 ppg, 3.5 rpg, 3.0 assists per game), and guard Andre Whiteacre and center Frank Waters. Last season, with a three-guard rotation, Eustachy split minutes with Watson and Waters.

"He's looking more at two or two guard set with Watson and Lightfoot at the forward spots."

"The strength of this team is in our returning guys," Eustachy said.

Other returners include senior forward Chuckery McBride and senior guard Ricky Wilson. With such depth, Eustachy had the ability to go-out and recruit some high school players who needed entering right into college play.

"Our three freshmen (Charles Bowe, Todd Russ and Travis Clark) are all typical newcomer players who are making the adjustment from high school to college. They'll all be good players, but right now we have the luxury of being deep enough to just work on getting them better."

Idaho will also have three transfers on the '92-'93 roster. Forward/Center Xanthus Houston, at 6-9 and hailing from Bradley University, will add strength in the middle with Waters and Watson. Dan Sorokin, at 6-7 from Belleville Illinois, and 6-6 Jimmy Brandt from Walla Walla Community College should both see time at forward.

Due to academic failures and injuries last year Eustachy didn't have the man power to play as many people as he'd liked. Now having some talented returners mixed with some experienced returners, Eustachy will look to play as many players as possible.

"We only have 13 players, said Eustachy. "I want to play everyone. If I don't we're not going to be as deep as last year."

"The Idaho Vandals should see plenty of this on offense as they're favored to win the Big Sky title. (FILE PHOTO)

 presented personal bests

BY LOREN ROBERTS

It hadn't been for one little bug, the Idaho women's cross country team may have been in the Big Sky Conference Outstanding Sunday morning.

Idaho's stand-out freshman Lauren Jeffrey got a little case of the flu in Salt Lake City Friday night, and thus the rest of the women's runners had to run without her in Saturday's BSC/NCAA District VIII Championships. Of the six who ran, all of them ran a season's best and five of the six ran their best time ever for a 3:00 mile race.

Idaho women's head coach Scott Loretz said that Jeffrey, one of Idaho's top three runners, was dehydrated that by race time there was no way she was going to run.

"I asked her (Jefferson) before the race what she wanted to do and she sort of rolled over on her stomach and said 'Tell me what's best for the team,'" Loretz said. "I knew then that she wasn't going to make it."

Although Idaho would have been stronger with her, the sand was still hurried through the course in personal record times. Idaho finished sixth out of eight teams in the BSC, but were just one point behind Montana and only 30 points separated them and second place Montana State. Northern Arizona won this year for the sixth straight time with just 21 points.

"I think we're going to see more people come back and we're looking forward to next year," Loretz said. "We're going to have an even more competitive team."

Following NAU and MSU from top to bottom was: Weber State, Idaho State, Montana, Idaho, Boise State University and Eastern Washington University. Second place overall went to Brigham Young University and third to the University of Colorado.

And the members of the offensive line enjoy this scrambling abilities — through gritted teeth. "Don't get me wrong, it's great to have a quarterback that can run like Doug, but he takes some pretty good hits once in a while," said senior tackle Dave Spellman. "We kind of turn our backs when this happens because he is our meal ticket."

Smith was also impressed with quarterback's scrambling ability, as he was with the opposition facing Nunnemer. "They're a good football team," said Smith. "We had to play our tails off in the second half."

Like any football coach, MSU's Bill Hysell doesn't like to lose, but he found some positives about the defeat.

"We've struggled all year offensively," said Hysell, "and we aren't capable of getting in a scoring battle, so the strength of this team isn't going to be the defense. Today, the secondary did a great job."

at Junior College Association Tournament in 1996. Now wrapping up two successful seasons at Idaho, Hanks feels great about the time she's spent here.

"It's been great being here and I've loved it," Hanks said. "We've had our ups and downs but we've been like a family. I'd consider them the best of the team a family away from home."

Now with her departure, Hilbert will be recruiting a setter to fill Hanks' void. Hilbern felt like that since Hanks is married, she's been sort of a role model for the rest of the team.

"This was the first year that I've had the same setter two years in a row," Hilbert said. "She's been a real good role model and since she's been playing with us she's really performed.""I would do anything for her. I'd do anything for her."

"We've struggled all year," said Hysell. "We're struggling in a scoring battle, so the strength of this team isn't going to be the defense. Today, the secondary did a great job."

I'd do anything for her."

B.F.A. Thesis Exhibit opens tomorrow

Seven students from the University of Idaho College of Art and Architecture have only one task left before they will graduate with their Bachelor of Fine Arts: their B.F.A. Thesis Exhibit. The B.F.A. Thesis Exhibit is an exciting opportunity to view the work which represents the December, 1992 graduates from the College of Art and Architecture. Seven art students will be showing their work from past to present creating a strikingly diverse exhibit with themes ranging from water to skin diseases. Each student will be expressing their personal opinions and feelings through a small body of work, and a thesis statement. With diversity in subject matter as well as medium, the B.F.A. Thesis Exhibit was attended by a reception on Nov. 18, from 4-7 p.m. and run through Dec. 3 at the University Gallery at Ridenbaugh Hall.

Christian station back on the air

Christian radio station KRLF-FM 88.5 is back on the air.

In September of 1991, the station ceased broadcasting due to a signal interfering with local television reception. After being granted a permit to change its broadcast frequency by the Federal Communications Commission, it is back on the air.

The station broadcasts soft contemporary Christian music with an emphasis on praise and worship. The station is also an affiliate of Standard News and the Christian Broadcasting Network providing hourly newscasts and the nation's longest-running contemporary Christian music countdown, "Christian Countdown, U.S.A." Messages by Dr. Karl A. Burden, president of KRLF and senior pastor of Living Faith Fellowship Ministry Training Center, are broadcast on "Answers for Life" each Sunday morning at 8 a.m.

"We are very grateful to God for this good news, and we're thrilled to go back to filling the air with the glory of Jesus Christ. We have been continually encouraged during our time off by area residents consistently expressing their support, and indicating they wanted us to return to the air as soon as possible," said Kevin Hunt,

Dracula proves disappointing

If you enjoy positive movie going experiences, do not see "Dracula." I'm sure they have loved the slick three to four minute trailer; that short piece is a great film. Extended to over two hours, however, and what you get is boring, stupid, and, at times, ridiculous filmmaking. The full length feature offers nothing more than filler for the three conspicuous images in the film: Dracula, blood, and breasts.

Dracula, upset by his fiance's death plunge and consequent damnation, desacrates religious symbols, drinks blood from a bleeding cross, and avours eternal allegiance to the undead. Centuries later, he discovers his bride reincarnate, in Mina, a soon to be married young English woman. The film follows his quest to again make her his bride.

Dracula (Gary Oldman), while visually engaging, remains aloof and shallow. The only frightening thing about him is his double-croissant hands. Oldman gives the best of the performances, but his character (like all of them) isn't given a chance to develop. His accent seems authentic (a Middle European godol) of Transylvania, Bulgaria, and Romania), but at times is unintelligible. His antagonists, Kasu Reeves, Anthony Hopkins, Cary Elwes (just to name a few), are too superficial to Dracula, and without costumes and coiffures to make them interesting. Kasu Reeves is, as every reviewer has noted, horrible. Hopkins, does at times, rise above mediocrity, but only because his character begins to resemble Hannibal Lecter. Winona Ryder plays Mina, a performance as par with the rest.

The blood and breasts (both male and female) are more memorable than the characters they coze and protrude from. If this film were of any importance whatsoever, the deeper meaning of these symbols could be discussed, I think it pertinent that as the film ended, I was hard pressed to remember how it started. At three to four minutes, the trailer contains what is glaringly absent in the film: extreme brevity.

First-rate trips planned

The University of Idaho Outdoor Program is offering some first-rate trips this Thanksgiving break. First is a desert canyon country backpacking trip through Canyonlands National Park in Utah. The goal is to explore one of the most remote and fascinating canyons in the desert southwest. Salt Creek Canyon is the center of a long, deep system of twisting canyons. It is an opportunity to experience one of the most magnificent wilderness areas in the country. The canyon contains sandstone formations, numerous arches, historic sites and prehistoric Anasazi ruins and rock art panels.

Trip participant must be experienced in multi-day backpacking in remote areas. Each person is responsible for his or her own safety, food and equipment. Because this is a cooperative trip, members must share all group costs, trip planning, and logistics.

The trip cost is $75 total for transportation and camp fees. The cost does not include food or equipment rental. Any equipment needed may be rented through the UI Outdoor Rental Center. The trip will take off on Nov. 21 and return on Nov. 28.

Next, Washington State University and the UI Outdoor Program will offer a Canadian Rockies ski trip. The goal of this trip is to do an early season mountain ski tour of an advanced nature. The destination of the trip is Bow Hut which is on the edge of the Wapta Icefield.

This is an advanced trip, so participants are required to have experience in winter camping and skiing with a full winter pack in mountainous terrain. Everyone is also required to bring and have experience using an avalanche transceiver, shovel and climbing skins for skins.

This is also a cooperative trip so responsibilities and costs are shared. The total cost for transportation and accommodations is $180.

Again, this total does not include food or equipment rental. The trip will leave Pullman Nov. 22 and return on Nov. 28.

Unfortunately, as of now both trips are booked. However, if these trips have your interest, there will be more to come this and next semester. For more information, contact the Outdoor Program located in the SUB basement at 885-6810.

"Patchwork" rough, but conveys AIDS message

By KIM BLEDIGE Staff Writer

The stage consisted of nothing but six black square boxes, and the actors sitting on them wore no costumes. Scripts in hand, the six read through Ariana Bums' "Patchwork" using only their voices to add drama. Yet the story told was moving and not made any less theatrical with the lack of props, lighting, or elaborate costumes.

"Patchwork" is a story about dealing with the reality of AIDS. It embraces the social aspects of the deadly virus, and also addresses the bureaucratic and educational problems associated with AIDS.

Although the play is only in its rudimentary stage, that is the dialogue needs some reworking and the relationship between characters need to be more clearly defined, "Patchwork" is a strong play that raises awareness about the stereotypical stories about victims of AIDS.

The characters chosen are not typical either. The story revolves around a stand-up comic, an old woman and a young child, and a brother, sister, and her ex-husband. The performances weave in and out of each of these characters' lives, comparable to a soap opera.

"I put the comic there to tell the audience it's O.K. to laugh that's very important," Burns said. "I'm still working on the comic, it's a great approach to a tough subject."

"The old woman and child serve as a 'generation bridge' to show the difference between generations," Burns hopes that the play will inspire people to communicate with each other and prompt people to get more information about AIDS.

"There aren't characters saying 'use a condom,' but I hope it gets people to think about it there's a real need to communicate about AIDS," Burns said.

This week, Burns and director, Kimberly Bouchard, are planning to talk with University of Idaho's Student Affairs about setting up dates to perform the piece to living groups and other UI organizations.

At the end of January, Burns hopes to have the play's wrinkles ironed out and a permanent cast picked out. Auditions for the actual performance of "Patchwork" will be conducted in the next few weeks.

"The actors in the reading were people in the community who had spare time," Burns said. "I'd like to see some of them in the actual performances."

With community support, and with the help at the Palouse AIDS Network, "Patchwork" will be a touring play educating people about the realities and problems people with AIDS and their families and friends face.

Accelerated sections of the class will be offered under Dance 105-27 from Jan. 11 to March 12. It will be held on Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 1:30 in the PEB, Studio 110.

The Dance 105-28 section will be offered to those with 105-27 as a prerequisite or with permission. It will run from March 22 to May 14 on Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 1:30 in the PEB Studio 110.

UI performing classic play

Performances of Chekhov's "Three Sisters" will be given at the Hartung Theatre on Dec. 3 and Dec. 10-13. The play portrays the lives of three women discontent with their lives but still earnestly searching for happiness. It takes place in a Russian town where sisters Olga, Irina and Masha struggle with the material and moral aspects of everyday life.

The sisters' parents have died, leaving them trapped in the family house with their gambling brother and his wretched wife, and with dreams of leaving for the thrilling life of Moscow. Still, year after year they find themselves in the same town with unfulfilled dreams.

Their life in the little town revolves mainly around a brigade of Russian soldiers stationed there. They provide entertainment for the girls as they philosophize, flirt and duel in their common efforts to give life meaning. A few of the soldiers believe they'll find such meaning in love and matrimony. In their hopeful state they each endeavor to win the heart of one of the sisters. Tickets for the performances may be purchased now at Ticket Express located in the UI Student Union Building or at the door. Prices are $5 for students, $7 for seniors and $8 for adults. The shows start at 8 p.m. each night with the exception of two matinees starting at 2 p.m. on Dec. 6 and 13.
