PAULS IN THE COLLEGES

General Charles J. Bailey thinks that anti-war demonstrations in our colleges are not indicative of male students, but only of co-ed influence upon the men. That is a bad guess. The general should get a little closer to a campus or two and then try again. How about the demonstrations in colleges that have no co-eds?

General Bailey is right when he says that in case of war, many students who now demonstrate against war would join the forces. Of course they would. They are as patriotic as get and persons more militant - such as generals. The demonstrations are against war, not against the national defense in time of war. It is a vast distinction.

College students of an age that makes them think of becoming the first human sacrifice in case of war. It is they who would take the foremost place, not the generals. Their study of contemporary history shows them the futility of the last great war, which was fought and won under those tragic anti-effects the world still suffers.

"Yes, college students will go to war if war comes. The certainty of that is their best warranty for preventing another such war. And General Bailey is right in his reference to a justicist strike on the campus of the University of Oregon. There was no strike, but an anti-war demonstration given with full faculty permission." - Portland Oregonian

SPOKANE TIMES

By MOFFITT.

PENNING THE PEN:

A recent issue of the local high school paper was a fascinating read. It had stories on the latest grades, all the students going to college, and the latest campus gossip. It seemed like everyone was happy and excited about the future.

The paper was filled with stories about the latest events on campus. It seemed like everyone was excited about the future.

The end of the year saw all the seniors graduating and heading off to college. It was a bittersweet time for everyone. On the one hand, they were excited to start a new chapter in their lives, but on the other hand, they were sad to see their high school days come to an end.

The students were all dressed up and ready for the big day. The seniors were all smiles, and the underclassmen were all nervous. It was a great day for everyone.

During the Washington State game, Fahr, former backfielder on the Idaho team, scored three touchdowns, although they may yet be better.
