ARGONAUT Notice

A meeting of all students of the university was held on the campus of the University of Idaho, at which time the Argonaut was published.

The Argonaut is a monthly magazine, published by the Argonaut Club, and is devoted to the interests of the university.

The purpose of the Argonaut is to inform the students of the university of the activities of the Argonaut Club, and to keep the students informed of the activities of the university.

The Argonaut is published in Salt Lake, and is distributed to all students of the university.

It's a Give & Take Proposition

THE Idaho Argonaut joins the administrative board of N.Y.U. when it offers students to the University. Sister university students atFive Towns, New York, are invited to try the Argonaut; the Idaho edition of the New York University newspaper. If registration is made with a class officers' representative before Monday's deadline, all students interested will be given time to train. But the University also expects something from them.

Among their numbers will be those who prefer to organize distinctively instead of attending the classes for which their university registration has been made. Good sense will lead them to select activities and functions which appeal to them and in which they will be interested. They will attend classes and take part in class activities and functions, but they will not be expected to register for them. The University will accept them merely as students and offer them the chance to participate in the university life of the University.

In the first years before they graduate, they expect to do for themselves for a fuller and more inward life and an opportunity to a more liberal and more educated life. They opt to take part in class activities and functions, but they will not be expected to register for them. The University will accept them merely as students and offer them the chance to participate in the university life of the University.

Let's Bury the Dead Matter

The student Handout came out today, and a good one it is. It's the first time, Cap Horton tells us, that the student Handout has ever been out since the ASUJ understood the responsibility of making the "student's edition" of the Idaho. Congratulations, Handout, you are on the way to becoming a real student newspaper.

But the staff dished out on it as usual. Parishs is for the newspaper. It's really rather logical, too. The students have a "student tradition" the student newspaper and student editors.

The Idaho light is in the green on condition that it is a part of the student's activities and functions. They try to have their "student" in every line of the students' lives. When the green crops out, all students for the future are supposed to be in the green. At least, that's what the Idaho "student tradition" is.

I'm sure every one has been trying to know what the "student tradition" is. And even though the "student tradition" is the "student tradition," the "student tradition" is the "student tradition" of the students. And even though the "student tradition" is the "student tradition," the "student tradition" is the "student tradition" of the students.

They try to have their "student" in every line of the students' lives. When the green crops out, all students for the future are supposed to be in the green. At least, that's what the Idaho "student tradition" is. And even though the "student tradition" is the "student tradition," the "student tradition" is the "student tradition" of the students. And even though the "student tradition" is the "student tradition," the "student tradition" is the "student tradition" of the students.

No student body is going to be in the green unless he is a student. And even though the "student tradition" is the "student tradition," the "student tradition" is the "student tradition" of the students. And even though the "student tradition" is the "student tradition," the "student tradition" is the "student tradition" of the students.

Arrangements similar to those in force last year under the PWA have been made to give students work on campus projects during the current year.

Greetings from The President

For the university faculty and staff all concerned, the administration of the University I extend to all students, both old and new, a cordial welcome.

As this is written, there is every evidence that during the coming year the administration of the University will have the largest constituency in its history. Many days during the coming school year will find the campus thronged with new students.

I urge all, both old and new, to extend a cordial welcome to the incoming students and to help to make their first year on the campus a happy, wholesome, and productive one.
